CITY COUNCIL ACTION REQUEST

TO: Ron Smith, City Manager
FROM: Marci Sigmon, Planner II Historic Preservation
DATE: 9/5/2025 2:00 PM

ACTION NEEDED ON: September 24, 2025
(Date of Council Meeting)

COUNCIL ACTION REQUESTED:

Conduct a public hearing and consider recommending approval of the Garfield/Green Street Historic District National Register Nomination to the North Carolina National Register Advisory Committee.

1. Summary of Information:

Staff is requesting City Council to review the Garfield/Green Street Historic District National Register Nomination (see Attachment 1) to be placed on the National Register of Historic Places and make a recommendation to approve the nomination to the North Carolina National Register Advisory Committee. In reviewing the nomination for the Garfield/Green Street Historic District, City Council will examine whether the nomination meets the criteria for listing in the National Register of Historic Places or does not meet the criteria for listing in the National Register of Historic Places. This examination is based on criteria set forth in Section 8 of the nomination report (Section 8 begins on Page 140). Please see the link in Attachments to view the 190-page Garfield/Green Street Historic District National Register Nomination and the related 395-page report compiling an inventory of the district including each building, its history, and current photographs.

The honor of being named a National Historic District is one of recognition and protection. If placed on the National Register of Historic Places, owners of structures are eligible to apply for tax credits to improve and renovate the structure if following the Secretary of the Interior Standards. Additionally, if approved as a national historic district, any road construction, bridge construction, or other capital projects utilizing federal funds in the designated Garfield/Green Street Historic District will be reviewed to ensure Historic Preservation methods are followed. The Garfield/Green Street Historic District is only nominated as a national historic district and not a local historic district. Local historic districts are subject to standards involving exterior changes to homes and outside areas.

In June 2022 historic preservation staff applied to the North Carolina National Register Advisory Committee for the Garfield/Green Street Area to be placed on the North Carolina Study List, the first step towards attaining a listing in the Register, and the area was accepted onto the Study List. Next, during April 2023 historic preservation staff applied for a grant to conduct a cultural and architectural study of the Garfield/Green Street Area from the Historic Preservation Fund Grant Program. The city was awarded a grant in September 2023. This grant led to the city selecting a team of historic preservation consultants, Susan Mayer, MA (SVM Historical Consulting) and Nick Linville, MA (Linville Historic Consulting). The consulting team began their study in 2024 and completed the nomination report in 2025.

The Garfield/Green Street Historic District is generally bound by Newton Avenue on the north, South Center Street on the west, Norfolk Southern Railroad on the south, and Old Salisbury Road on the east (see attached map). Through the survey and research conducted by the consultants with overview by the State Historic Preservation Office, the Garfield/Green Street Historic District was determined to meet the National Register of Historic Places for two criterion - Criterion A: Black Ethnic Heritage and Social History and Criterion A: Civil Rights. The district has a period of significance that begins in 1886 when burials began at its oldest extant resource, Green Street Cemetery, and ends in 1973 when the most recent construction of the historical period, Calvary Presbyterian Church, was completed.

The consultants research resulted in the district being significant to local history as one of the first Black neighborhoods in Statesville and the most historically prominent. The district boundary encompasses 95 acres and is the location of numerous sites of significance to the history of the city. Sites such as the first graded Black school, the first Black congregation, the first Black funeral home, and first communal Black cemetery where many of Statesville's African American residents are buried. Overall, 144 buildings, 5 sites, and 1 structure contribute to the significant resources in the district.

The city and consultants held one public meeting on May 20, 2025 and a second public meeting on August 26, 2025 to share information gathered about the district and receive questions and comments from citizens. Both meetings were held within the identified district at First Baptist Church on Garfield Street. After receiving comments from the community, the consultants submitted the Garfield/Green Street Historic District National Register Nomination to the State Historic Preservation Office during the summer of 2025.

2. Previous Council or Relevant Actions:

On April 3, 2023 City Council approved Planning staff to apply for a FY 2023 federal Historic Preservation Fund pass-through grant in the amount of $24,000 with a 40% local match in the amount of $16,000 to support services for a National Registry Nomination for the Garfield/Green Street Area. Next, on October 2, 2023 City Council approved Planning staff to accept a FY 2023 federal Historic Preservation Fund pass-through grant in the amount of $29,000 with a local match in the amount of $16,000 to support services for a National Registry Nomination for the Garfield/Green Street Area. The Historic Preservation Commission will make a recommendation to city council at their regularly scheduled meeting on August 28, 2025. Their recommendation will be forwarded to City Council before the September 15, 2025 City Council meeting.

3. Strategic Initiatives Supported/Impacted:

Developing Our City: N/A

Connecting Our City: N/A

Connecting Our Communities: N/A

Strategic Plan Values: N/A

4. Budget/Funding Implications:

See Previous Council or Relevant Actions.

5. Consequences for Not Acting:

If City Council does not make a recommendation or decides the nomination does not meet the National Register of Historic Places criteria, then the Garfield/Green Street Area will not become a national historic district and not receive recognition and protection as provided when an area is designated a national historic district. The property owners of structures will not be eligible to apply for tax credits to improve and renovate their structures. In addition, if not approved as a national historic district, any road construction, bridge construction, or other capital projects utilizing federal funds in the proposed Garfield/Green Street Historic District will not be reviewed to ensure Historic Preservation methods are followed.

6. Department Recommendation:

Staff recommends approving the Garfield/Green Street Historic District National Register Nomination to the North Carolina National Register Advisory Committee.

7. Manager Comments:

Concur with the department recommendation.

8. Next Steps:

If approval is recommended, the North Carolina National Register Advisory Committee will hold a regularly scheduled meeting on October 9, 2025 to determine the eligibility of the Garfield/Green Street Historic District for placement on the National Register of Historic Places.

Narrative Description

Summary Paragraph

The Garfield and Green Streets Historic District is located southeast of the Statesville Downtown Central Business Area and two blocks east of the Academy Hill Historic District (NRHP 1980). It comprises 95 acres and contains approximately 250 parcels and 139 contributing primary resources fifty years of age or older. The district is generally bounded at the north by a tributary of Fourth Creek, at the west by S. Center Street and Shelton Avenue, at the south by the Norfolk Southern Railroad, and at the east by Old Salisbury Road. The district is largely residential with commercial properties at its west edge near S. Center Street. Contributing resources are primarily residential buildings but also include religious, educational, and recreational buildings and sites.

Narrative Description

The Garfield and Green Streets Historic District is located southeast of the Statesville Downtown Central Business Area and two blocks east of the Academy Hill Historic District (NRHP 1980). The district is bounded at the north by a tributary of Fourth Creek, at the west by S. Center Street and Shelton Avenue, at the south by the Norfolk Southern Railroad, and at the east by Old Salisbury Road. The surveyed area comprises 95 acres and contains approximately 250 parcels and 139 contributing primary resources built through 1973. The district is largely residential with commercial properties at its west edge near S. Center Street.

Of the 176 primary resources identified in the district, 139 (79%) were determined as contributing due to integrity of design and historic association. Contributing resources are primarily residential buildings but also include religious, educational, and recreational buildings and sites. Residential resources were constructed between ca. 1890 and 1973 and include examples of traditional/vernacular, Craftsman, Colonial Revival, Period Revival, Minimal Traditional, and Ranch styles. Religious resources are primarily churches, with four extant resources in the district still utilized by active congregations. The oldest, Mt. Pleasant AME Zion Church, dates to ca. 1903 and was listed in the National Register of Historic Places in 1980. The other three were built ca. 1957 to 1973 and are Minimal Traditional with Colonial Revival detail or Modernist in style. Commercial resources date from ca. 1925 to ca. 1962 and are generally Vernacular Commercial in design.

There are few outbuildings in the district. Of the 22 outbuildings that were inventoried, over half (15) were garages for residential buildings. Other contributing secondary resources include two sheds, a basketball court, an athletic field, a concession stand, a pavilion, and a bathroom building. A number of prefabricated metal carports and frame sheds were observed in the district; these were not inventoried separately but are mentioned in the associated resource entry.

Four sites were identified and inventoried in the district. The oldest and most prominent of these is the Green Street Cemetery (S. Green Street), established in 1886 as the Black burial ground in Statesville. Adjacent to the cemetery to the north is a vacant parcel which served as a potter's field (Green Street Potter's Field, east of 611 S. Green Street). Garfield Park (409 Garfield Street) was developed in the 1950s with a recreation center, swimming pool, and basketball court. The recreation center and swimming pool are no longer extant, but the park remains a key site within the district with the addition of a ca. 2011 pavilion and bathroom building. The location of the private Presbyterian school Billingsley Memorial Academy (541 S. Green Street), which was later occupied by the congregation of Broad Street Presbyterian Church, is identified as a contributing site. While the two-story-with-basement brick building was demolished ca. 1972 when adjacent Calvary Presbyterian Church was built, the site holds special significance for the district.

The S. Elm Street Bridge (S. Elm Street) is the only contributing primary structure in the district. Located at the south edge and carrying S. Elm Street over the Norfolk Southern Railroad tracks, the bridge connected the schools, churches, and residents of the district with Black neighborhoods south of the railroad tracks.

The topography of the district is marked by rolling hills, with the highest point at the intersection of Garfield and South Green Streets. This location is considered the historic core of the district, which was central to educational, commercial, recreational, civic, and religious activity of Statesville's Black community. Most parcels with residential resources have mature trees. The district has a mix of two-lane streets with curbs and sidewalks and streets without curbs and sidewalks. The majority of resources in the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District are single-family or duplex dwellings densely grouped and sited near the street with small front yards on lots approximately 0.25 acres or less in size.

A number of vacant lots, approximately 87, are interspersed throughout the district. Many vacant lots previously had buildings which have been demolished in recent years; however, many vacant lots were never developed and share ownership with adjacent parcels with extant resources. A concentration of vacant lots, most of which formerly had buildings and are historically considered within the boundaries of the district, are found along the north and south edges of the district. Pertinent information about vacant lots will be noted in inventory entries.

Residential buildings comprise the majority of resources in the district. The most common architectural type in the district is traditional/vernacular dwellings. These are typically one-story in height, front gabled, and of frame construction with a full-width front porch and little historic ornamentation. These common house types are either ca. 1925-ca. 1950 single-family dwellings or ca. 1941-ca. 1959 duplexes with two centrally-placed front doors side by side. Several older dwellings dating to ca. 1910 or earlier follow the I-house form. Many resources are built in the Craftsman style, with many of these being side-gabled one-and-a-half story dwellings or one-story vernacular buildings with typical Craftsman stylistic features applied, including tapered square columns on brick piers, exposed rafter tails, dormers, or three or four-over-one wood sash windows. Some examples of the American Foursquare plan are extant. Period Revival Cottages with Tudor Revival detail dwellings are largely concentrated on South Green Street. After World War II, traditional/vernacular houses continued to be built, but Minimal Traditional and Ranch houses were also constructed as a mix of infill development by later generations of residents or replacement of older, smaller buildings. An influx of new construction from the late twentieth century and early twenty-first century is apparent, with these one-story and two-story frame dwellings reflecting the traditional/vernacular style, though larger in scale, found in the district. Many emulate Craftsman-style buildings, with tapered square columns on brick piers.

The historic integrity of architecture of the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District is largely intact. Many residential resources have had original materials replaced or covered—vinyl replacement windows and vinyl siding likely over wood weatherboard or asbestos shingle siding is a common alteration. New porch materials, including columns, deck, and railing, are also common. Brick pier foundation construction was common for resources built before 1945, and many resources have had brick or concrete masonry unit infill, some with stucco, to close crawlspaces. There are a number of residential resources in deteriorated or even ruinous condition, though some of these buildings were undergoing renovation at the time of field survey. Many of these have been purchased by LLCs for rental properties. The grouping of one-story frame dwellings at the corner of Chambers and Harrison Streets (202-220 Chambers Street) were at varying stages of renovation at the time of survey. Some showed wood weatherboard siding being covered with vinyl siding and standing seam metal roofing replaced with asphalt shingles.

Ownership of residential resources in the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District historically was a mix of Black owner-occupant, Black owned-tenant occupant, and white owned-Black tenant occupant. The architectural style of these resources reflected ownership status, as tenant-occupied dwellings are typically traditional/vernacular in form and include a number of duplexes and other multi-family occupancies. Black owner-occupied residences tend to reflect the architectural trends of the period in which they were built. These are largely located along the 200-block of Garfield Street and 600-block of South Green Street, the latter known as “Teacher’s Row.” A large number of resources were found to have multiple generations of family ownership and/or occupancy.

Development History

The Garfield and Green Streets Historic District developed from the Garfield and South Green Street intersection and along the railroad tracks. The Green Street Cemetery (S. Elm Street) was established in 1886. Two years earlier, trustees of Emmaus Baptist Church, later renamed First Baptist Church, purchased a parcel and built a sanctuary (no longer extant). Adjacent to the south was the Colored Graded School (no longer extant). The oldest extant buildings are found near the intersection of South Elm Street and Chambers Street at the eastern edge of the district near the railroad tracks—the ca. 1890 Sanford Adams House (692 S. Elm Street), the ca. 1894 Daniel and Catherine B. Baucom House (423 Chambers Street), and the ca. 1894 Thomas G. and Gertrude G. Biddings House (401 Chambers Street).

Preceding the period of historic significance, most of the property comprising the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District was owned by a small number of white persons. Into the early twentieth century, these large parcels were platted and sold to a mix of Black and white buyers. Mary C. Bell is the earliest seller of land to Black buyers in the 1870s. Her property lay along the railroad tracks and north along South Elm and South Green Streets and included the tract which became the Green Street Cemetery. The first plat filed with Iredell County was the property of Mrs. M. A. Tomlin. In 1917 she subdivided land north of Garfield Street surrounding Billingsley Memorial Academy, which she had sold to its trustees in 1901. Eighty-four parcels of approximately 0.2 acres were purchased by many Black residents.¹

The historic core of the area at the intersection of Garfield and South Green Streets was central to educational, commercial, recreational, civic, and religious activity of Statesville's Black community. Extant contributing educational resources are Morningside High School (410 Garfield Street) and the Morningside School Annex (611 S. Green Street). The former resource was the site of the original Morningside School, and a historic marker commemorates its significance. Garfield Park (409 Garfield Street) is located across from Morningside High School. The park has provided recreational activities to the neighborhood since 1954, though the gymnasium and swimming pool are no longer extant.

Four churches are located within the district. The oldest extant church is ca. 1903 Mt. Pleasant AME Zion Church (NR 1980, 537 S. Center Street), located at the western edge of the district at the northeast corner of South Center and Garfield Streets. First Baptist Church (464 Garfield Street) constructed the extant Modernist facility in 1967, relocating from its original location at the intersection of Garfield and South Green Streets (not extant, 301 Garfield Street) to the eastern edge of the district. Presbyterian churches in the neighborhood, including Tradd Street Presbyterian Church (not extant, 538 S. Tradd Street), merged to form Calvary Presbyterian Church (531 S. Green Street) which built its extant facility in 1973 adjacent to the former site of Billingsley Memorial Academy (S. Green Street, contributing site). Lastly, Scotts Chapel Methodist Church (316 Chambers Street) at the southern edge of the district relocated to its current building in 1957 from the southwest corner of Chambers and S. Elm Street (vacant lot, east of 206-220 Chambers Street).

Small businesses including grocers, barbers, and lunch counters were scattered throughout the district, though few of these resources are extant. The best example is the Littlejohn Duplex (142-144 Garfield Street), which housed Littlejohn's Café, Littlejohn's Barber Shop, a dentist office, and real estate office in the 1920s. The primary business district was located at the western edge of the district south of the Garfield Street intersection of South Center Street, which terminated at the original site of the Statesville Depot. Extant commercial resources date from 1925 into the 1960s and include Rutledge & Bigham Mortuary (603 S. Center Street), the Holliday Building (609-611 S. Center Street, noncontributing), and Iredell Credit Union (634 S.

Center Street, noncontributing). Nearby are Rankin's Barber Shop (131 Garfield Street) and Econ-O-Wash Laundromat (126 Garfield Street), which developed in the 1950s and 1960s.

The most prominent professional occupation in the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District was in the funerary industry, and many commercial and residential resources have historical significance in this area. The oldest operating mortuary is Rutledge & Bigham Mortuary (603 S. Center Street), founded in 1922 by St. Charles Rutledge (423 Chambers Street) and Gadson Bigham. Descendants of the Bigham family still operate the business, and many resources in the district are connected with them. Peterson & Mangum Funeral Home (206 Garfield Street) operated in this location from 1943 until 1972, when they moved to the former Morningside School Annex (611 S. Green Street). The business opened in 1933 and occupied the Katie Golden House (662 S. Green Street) in its initial years.

Residents of the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District also provided professional and specialty services to their Black neighbors, as segregation impeded or prevented access to white facilities. Medical providers included physician Dr. Robert S. Holliday (241 Garfield Street) and dentist Dr. Blair A. Abernathy (622 S. Green Street), whose practice was located in the Holliday Building (609-611 S. Center Street, noncontributing). Zera Spann (650 Harrison Street) was a trained nurse, and the home of Jane Abernathy Conner and Daisy Conner Robinson (249 Garfield Street, noncontributing) served as the "colored ward" of Davis Hospital. Susie Adams Gillespie operated a rest home for Black elders in her home (123 Lincoln Street) until constructing Gillespie's Rest Home (125-127 Lincoln Street) next door ca. 1962.

INVENTORY LIST

The district includes all or portions of Broadway Court, S. Center Street, Chambers Street, Dockery Street, S. Elm Street, Falls Street, Garfield Street, S. Green Street, Harrison Street, Lincoln Street, Newton Avenue, Old Salisbury Road, S. Tradd Street, and Wagner Street. Resource addresses were determined by the address number observed on the property during field work; Iredell County property records may provide a different number.

Building names and dates of construction were determined using information from Iredell County property records, Sanborn maps, Statesville city directories, and aerial imagery and photographs. Sources for aerial imagery include the Iredell County Library (aerial photography dating from ca. 1940 to 1955), Historic Aerials (1956, 1965, 1983, 1998, and 2002), and the Iredell County Tax Map (1993 and 2006).² As the district had a larger number of tenants residing in dwellings, deed research was necessary to determine ownership and assign names. Some resources were home to long-term renters and are named accordingly.

All contributing resources were constructed during the period of significance, 1886 to 1973 and retain sufficient integrity of location, design, setting, materials, workmanship, feeling, and association to contribute to the historic character of the district. Material changes made to buildings do not automatically disqualify a resource as contributing, and these may be considered contributing if made during the period of significance. Common material changes in the district include the installation of asbestos, aluminum, or vinyl siding over wood weatherboard; replacement of metal or composite roofing with asphalt shingles; replacement doors and windows; construction of rear additions; and enclosure of side or rear porches. While these changes in combination may render a property noncontributing, a building is contributing if it retains its original form, fenestration, and character-defining architectural features. Major aesthetic or structural alterations made after the period of significance may deem a resource to be noncontributing. These changes may include the enclosing or alteration of porches; large additions visible from the street; and changes to notable architectural features (i.e. dormers). For example, the ca. 1929 Bradshaw House (534 Broadway Court) was determined to be noncontributing due to a ca. 1998 gabled addition to the west elevation along the façade. Likewise, while the ca. 1914 White Blackwell House (242 Garfield Street) retains its form, fenestration, and historical pressed tin shingle roof, the nearly full-width shed porch was enclosed ca. 1999, altering its character. The replacement of windows and doors, installation of vinyl siding, roof replacement, and parged foundations do not disqualify a resource from consideration as contributing. A pair of 1956 duplexes at 511-513 S. Elm Street and 515-517 S. Elm Street represent this evaluation. Both have replacement windows and doors but differ in their exterior sheathing—the former has original wood German siding and the latter is sheathed with vinyl siding over most of the original wood German siding. However, both were deemed contributing because the mass, general appearance, and fenestration patterns were retained.

Outbuilding dates are estimates based on information from property records and field observation of forms and materials. Foliage and small-scale lots with buildings located relatively close together hindered the documentation and evaluation of outbuildings that were not visible from the public rights-of-way. Outbuildings which were not counted as resources include those considered to be temporary (prefabricated sheds and carports) or were largely visible on aerial photos or Google Street View; they are described in the inventory entries.

BROADWAY COURT³

506 Broadway Court

A one-story L-shaped dwelling is shown here on the 1950 Sanborn map. It was demolished between 1983 and 1993 according to aerial imagery.

This one-story, front-gabled, frame house is built on a masonry foundation and is sheathed in vinyl siding and an asphalt shingle roof. The half-width, gabled porch has vinyl board and batten siding and square section wood posts on a concrete slab floor.

The house first appears on the 1925 Sanborn map. Gladys Houston Owens purchased the property in 1944, and the house remains in the family. She was a graduate of Morningside High School and worked as a domestic for private families, including William Allison, Sr. and Jack and Paulette Harris. She married three times—William Earl Owens in 1936, Ray Wood White in 1946, and William Floyd Alexander in 1970.⁴

This one-story frame house is built on a stuccoed masonry foundation and is sheathed in vinyl siding. The hipped roof has asphalt shingles. It was under renovation at the time of field work in June 2024, and all windows were covered with plywood. Google Streetview imagery from June 2022 shows the house previously had a hipped dormer with a pair of 4-lite square wood sash windows and wrought iron railings and supports at the porch. The full-width hipped porch has new wood square section posts, decking, and railing with horizontal planking around the crawlspace.

Junius McClelland purchased lot 19 of the M. A. Tomlin property in 1916. A building does not appear on Sanborn maps until 1925, by which time Dr. Robert S. Holliday and Mary C. Holliday were owners. The Hollidays were granted a building permit in June 1925 to construct a "one-story frame dwelling on Lincoln street, estimated cost $850."⁶

This one-story house is built on brick piers with concrete masonry unit infill and is sheathed in vinyl siding. The front-gabled roof has standing seam metal roofing. The site slopes from the rear to the street, and the shed-roofed porch foundation is tall with square section wood posts, decking, and railing. Wood steps approach from the east side. The porch is centered on the façade, which is two bays wide with a wood replacement door with storm door and typical two-over-two wood-sash windows with metal frame storm windows. A brick chimney rises through the ridge in the middle.

The Scott House is a one-and-a-half-story frame house with clipped front-gabled roof and Craftsman-style detailing. The site slopes sharply from the street to the rear of the parcel, and the house is built on brick foundation. It is sheathed vinyl siding and has an asphalt shingle roof. A hipped one-story porch at the west elevation has square section posts on brick piers and wood decking and railing. The façade is three bays wide. The first bay has a typical one-over-one vinyl replacement window with wood pergola supported by a square section post on brick pier. The second bay has a pair of typical windows in the gable and the entry porch, to which the pergola is connected. The clipped-gable porch has square section wood posts on brick piers and replacement door with storm door. The third bay has a typical window. A hipped wing at the east elevation is stepped back from the façade and has a pair of windows on the south and east elevations. A brick chimney extends through the roof at the west elevation. A gabled ell extends from the rear and has a wood porch at its east elevation.

Florie Leach purchased lots 15-17 of the M. A. Tomlin property in 1921. The house appears on the 1925 Sanborn map, and Leach was listed in the 1925-1926 Statesville city directory as living at 530 Harrison Street. She operated a boarding house there in 1930, with boarders including Thomas Jones, a Black man from Canada who she married. Flora died in 1931. The property was bank-owned until 1951, when Howard Andrew Houston, Jr. purchased it from his father's estate. The Houston family had lived in the house as early as 1938-1939. Howard Sr. owned a pressing club. Lois Chambers Houston was a sister of Gladys Houston Owens White, who lived at 507 Broadway Court. Howard Jr. worked for the Public Service Gas Company and died of a heart attack at age 45. His wife Mabel Steele Houston was a charter member of the Nicotiana Flower Club and retired from Bernhardt Furniture Company. According to deed records, the family still owns the house.

The Leach-Houston House is a one-and-a-half-story Craftsman-style frame house built on brick pier foundation. It is sheathed in asbestos shingle siding, though wood weatherboard siding is visible at the rear southwest corner, and has a standing seam metal roof. The façade is three bays wide with an engaged porch. The porch has a concrete floor and battered wood posts on brick piers with metal railing. The replacement door with storm door is flanked by typical three-over-one Craftsman wood sash windows. A shed dormer is centered in the façade and has a trio of square windows. A flat-roofed wood frame carport is located north of the house.

CENTER STREET, SOUTH

Center Street AME Zion Church

1903, ca. 1930, ca. 1980

Previously Listed

537 S. Center Street

Center Street African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church is the oldest building associated with a Black congregation within Statesville. Constructed in 1903, it is the congregation's third home on the site. Antebellum church rolls list numerous Black communicants attending the services of the white dominated congregations of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Shortly after the Civil War, Black members withdrew and established their own congregations. Black Methodists in Statesville, led by Sidney S. Murdock and Alfred Bailey, organized a congregation known as Mt. Pleasant in 1868 or 1869. Murdock, who served as pastor to the congregation until 1886, donated a lot on South Center Street within the historically Black community known as Depot Hill. The group became aligned with the AME Zion denomination, and the name of the church became known as Center Street.⁹

The exterior of the church was described by historian Laura A. W. Phillips in the 1980 nomination for the National Register of Historic Places.

The late Gothic Revival common bond brick church is three bays wide, seven bays deep, and has a steep gable roof covered with pressed tin. The brickwork detail is quite elaborate. The front boasts two corner entrance towers of unequal height. The south tower is the larger of the two with three stages. The first stage has two pointed-arch entrances. The second and third stages contain pairs of pointed-arch louvered vents [note: now infilled with vinyl siding] on each face. Corbelled brick string courses and brick corner stiles define each stage. The tower is topped by projecting corbelled corners with pyramidal finials. The north tower is smaller with only two stages: a smaller pointed-arch door at the base and only one louvered vent per face on the second level. Above the corbelled cornice is a pyramidal roof.

A large, pointed arch stained-glass window is the central feature of the lively facade. Above this window and near the peak of the gable is a round window with a Star of David muntin design. On either side of the large stained-glass window are unusual lozenge-shaped projections in the brickwork. The façade has a brick string course about one-third of the way up the wall, and a brick corbelled cornice matching that used on the towers outlines the gable.

The side elevations exhibit pointed-arch stained-glass windows with brick arched labels and brick pilasters between windows. A brick and cinderblock addition is attached to the rear of the building.¹⁰

The rear elevation of the church shows the nave gable intersecting the hipped transect roof. The gable has hexagonal wood shingle siding. Two additions extend from the rear. A two-story shed addition was made to the east elevation of the church between 1925 and 1930 according to Sanborn maps. It is sheathed in common bond brick. The roof, which intersects the primary roof about halfway up its run, is hipped at the north and has a gable with vinyl siding likely installed in the 1980s at the south. Its rear elevation has one-over-one windows at the lower level in the first bay and upper level in the second bay over a six-panel replacement door which enters into the basement. The north elevation has a one-over-one window in the upper level and a two-lite window in the basement.

A brick and concrete masonry unit two-story addition was likely made at this time, as it first appears on aerial imagery in 1983. The addition is shed roofed and starts at the eave of the primary mass. It has one-over-one windows centered in the east and south elevations at the upper level. A six-panel door is at the basement entry at the north elevation. A concrete paved area with concrete masonry unit retaining wall has concrete steps and wrought iron railings to the paved parking lot on the adjacent parcel to the south.

The church underwent a rigorous restoration program in 1980-1981 led by pastor Dr. M. L. Newman, noted as a “church architect and builder who serves at AME Zion churches while they are being restored or rebuilt.”¹¹ A local newspaper interview with Dr. Newman provided a thorough description of the renovations. The foundation of the building was reinforced with new concrete block walls in the basement, which was accessed by new, safer stairways. The exterior brick was sandblasted, and mortar was repointed. New metal roofing was installed where older materials had failed. The bell tower and belfry were reconditioned, and the bell was restored to working order. The interior walls were plastered.¹²

St. Charles Rutledge and Gadson G. Bigham, Sr. founded Rutledge & Bigham Mortuary Service in 1921. The two men met while attending mortuary school in Washington, D. C. The company opened for business in a small frame building at 109 Garfield Street, and moved into one side of the Eureka Building, owned by the Statesville Masonic Lodge in 1925.¹³ Gadson Bigham, Sr. died in 1934, and his widow Mary B. Bigham joined Rutledge operating the business. Rutledge suffered a stroke in the 1950s, and Mary, Gadson, Jr., and Marie Rutledge continued to maintain the business. Mary became sole owner of Rutledge & Bigham Mortuary in 1963. The following year, the Woods property at the corner of Garfield and Center Streets was acquired. Statesville architect Tom H. Hutchins was contracted to design the new facility to contain a chapel, offices, casket selection room, and apartment. The new facility was dedicated in October 1966.¹⁴ Louise B. Moton, daughter of Gadson and Mary Bigham, joined the staff as a part-time employee in 1961. She received her funeral director's license in 1963 and graduated from Pittsburgh Institute of Mortuary Science in 1972. Upon the death of Mary B. Bigham in 1980, Margaret B. Booker, Charles W. Brown, and Louise B. Moton became the joint owners of Rutledge & Bigham Mortuary, Inc.¹⁵

Rutledge & Bigham Mortuary is located at southeast corner of Garfield Street and South Center Street. The site slopes down from south edge of the parcel to the north, creating a three-story section at rear. The building is sited at the western end of the parcel, and there is an asphalt parking lot comprising the remaining two-thirds of the parcel. The modernist building is two stories with a basement opening at the east elevation and has flat roofs. Running bond brick veneer is utilized in three colors--red as primary, yellow brick at the chapel and detail on the façade, and brown brick at the chapel foundation. The façade is three bays wide. The main level has a recessed entry approached by concrete stairs and porch with typical metal railing with mesh panels. Double-leaf doors have full lites with transom and south sidelight. The two flanking bays have two-lite horizontal windows above contrasting yellow brick. Signage is located in the first bay with a granite cornerstone is at the northwest corner. The third bay has a solid metal door with transom; stairs with wrought iron railing approach from the sidewalk. Sidewalks and stairs are covered with artificial turf. The façade also has a shallow full-width concrete porch on brick foundation, though it is inaccessible due to the stair railing placement.

The asymmetrical upper level has an accessible flat roof with typical railing. The second story façade is set back and located above the second and third bays of the main level. It has a three-lite window, through wall A/C unit, and two-lite door under a flat roof overhang.

The north elevation is comprised of the façade bay, the protruding four-bay chapel, and a three-story service section at rear which is two bays wide. The façade bay has a two-lite window. The chapel is sheathed in yellow brick and overhangs the brick foundation. Each bay consists of vertical colored glass windows with tilting lites and red brick above and below. The service section has fenestration at the top level—a two-lite metal sash window in the first bay and a tall metal staircase to a solid door in the second bay.

The south elevation of the building is three levels in height. The basement has a protruding bay with three wood garage doors. The main level has a pair of two-lite metal sash windows and a trio of two-lite metal sash windows, and the top level has a large four-lite metal sash window and a tripartite metal sash picture window.

The interior has had few changes, with extant original wood paneling, doors, flooring, and pre-ADA bathrooms. Acoustic tile drop ceiling was added.

The Rutledge & Bigham Mortuary Chapel was constructed in 1990 adjacent to the extant building. It was dedicated in honor of Mary Belle Ramsey Brown Bigham, longtime owner of Rutledge and Bigham Mortuary Service who died in 1980.¹⁶

The symmetrical façade is one bay wide and has two gabled cast stone-capped parapet sections—one for the primary mass and a second lower portion for the entry. Concrete steps lead to the concrete slab of the flat-roofed porch with Doric column supports. Half-lite double doors have five-light sidelights. At either side of the façade are rectangular brick motifs with soldier row borders. The north elevation has four vertical stained glass windows. Stairs lead below grade to the basement. The east elevation has three stained glass windows, the middle window in a cross shape, and a solid steel door at the basement. The north interior wall of the chapel is shared with the south exterior wall of the mortuary. A single-width door connects the mortuary and chapel, but the building largely functions separately.

Dr. R. S. Holliday purchased a parcel on South Center Street in 1926. It had previously been the site of a frame building which housed Golden's Café. He was granted a building permit in December 1927 for a "two-story brick veneer building on South Center street to cost $4,500."¹⁷ The building was not complete in time to be listed in the 1928-1929 city directory, but by 1932 it housed H. S. Byers's drug store (609), the dental office of Dr. Blair J. Abernathy (609 1/2), and Littlejohn's Sanitary Barber Shop (611).¹⁸ Dr. Abernathy would be a long-term tenant until his retirement in the 1960s, while Littlejohn's Barber Shop continues to operate in the space.¹⁹ The second story of the building was removed after 1950 according to aerial imagery.²⁰

The Holliday Building is a one-story running bond brick building with stepped false front façade. It was previously two stories in height, but the second story was removed after 1950 which detracts from its integrity. The site slopes away from the street. A ca. 1994 gabled roof with asphalt shingles and vinyl soffit has been added to the previous flat roof behind the parapet. The façade is three bays wide, with glass storefront windows atop brick knee walls in the outer bays. The middle bay is recessed and has three entry doors, two full-lite doors to the main level units flanking a pair of narrow full-lite doors directly opening to stairs accessing the upstairs unit. A canvas awning hangs over the storefront, concealing transom windows running full width. The north and south elevations have no fenestration but do have murals painted on panels hung from the exterior walls. The east elevation is two bays wide, which are clearly delineated by differences in masonry. The first (south) bay has a pair of half-lite wood doors with storm doors and fenestration infilled with brick. The second (north) bay has a wood panel door with wood screen door and a six-over-six wood window. Both doors have wood steps leading to them. The brick at the top is stepped and in deteriorated condition. The gable roof is visible here with vinyl siding in the gable end. A concrete masonry unit retaining wall with aluminum fencing is north of the rear exit, which leads to an asphalt parking lot shared with Rutledge & Bigham Mortuary next door to the north (vacant lot, 615 S. Center Street).

VACANT LOT – Statesville Gas Light & Fuel Company Gas Works, 615 S. Center Street

The site is a paved parking lot but was formerly the site of the Statesville Gas Light & Fuel Company Gas Works. In 1911 the city granted a franchise to Sidney Kenney and Associates of Philadelphia, which completed construction on the plant in 1912. The gas plant manufactured coal and oil gas for consumers and businesses until ca. 1947, when it converted to propane air gas. The 1950 Sanborn map shows a three-story manufacturing facility, two compression tanks, two crude oil tanks, three compressor tanks, and a gasometer on the site, now operated by Public Service Company of North Carolina (PSNC). The company transitioned to natural gas in 1952 and shuttered the South Center Street plant, though it remained in use as a pipe storage yard and housed regulating equipment. In 2014 PSNC demolished a two-story brick office building, above-ground storage tank, garage, and small metal shed, remediated the contaminated soil on the site and on adjacent parcels (603 and 609 S. Center Street), and constructed the extant parking lot.²¹

This commercial building, which historically was addressed 626-630 S. Center Street, was home to Black-owned and operated businesses which served the Garfield and Green Street community. The most prominent and longest tenured was Steele's Café. Stamey S. Steele moved his lunch room into 630 S. Center Street by 1943. He and wife Effie operated Steele's Café for about forty years.²² Also in unit 626 S. Center Street were a barber shop and beauty shop dating back to 1946-1947—Rayvone Stewart operated Sunset Barber Shop, and Arie Nesbit Nicholson was the owner of Quality Beauty Shop.²³

This common bond brick commercial building is three bays wide. The north bay is wider. Each bay has storefront windows, with the single storefront entry door in the middle bay. Fabric awnings and signage insets are above. The side elevations have stepped parapets with tile cap and corbel detail at the rear elevation. A corbelled brick chimney is at the west elevation. The rear elevation faces Shelton Avenue and is three bays wide with a parged foundation. The north bay has a concrete loading dock with steps and metal railing. The face of the building is parged, and it has a window filled with concrete masonry units and a door with fabric awning above. The middle bay is a ca. 2006 shed concrete masonry unit addition extending to the sidewalk. The south bay has a solid steel door and perforated masonry block wall around a concrete deck.

J. H. Stimson received a building permit to construct a "one-story brick and cement building" on South Center Street.²⁴ The initial tenants were White-owned businesses, but by the late 1950s Black-owned businesses located here including the Iredell Credit Union, established in 1946. This institution provided vital financial services to Black residents of Statesville and the surrounding county. Among its founders were George F. Dalton, a Morningside schoolteacher, and Travis Van Mangum, a funeral director. Both men continued to serve as officers as the credit union grew. Initially starting with just eighteen members, the Iredell Credit Union expanded significantly, reaching 1,000 members by 1958. That same year, the credit union opened a new office at 634 South Center Street, signifying its growth and success in serving the broader community beyond just farmers.²⁵

The one-story commercial building has a flat roof and, according to the 1950 Sanborn map, brick veneer over concrete masonry unit construction. The façade brick has a decorative face. The original storefront has been filled with similar brick with plywood in transoms at an unknown date. Horizontal windows flank the replacement storefront door, above which is a metal canopy and inset brick for signage. The north elevation has a brick-infilled door and windows, one which may have been a drive-through window for the credit union. The stepped parapet has concrete cap at the façade and metal cap around the remainder. A chimney at west elevation has corbelled top. The rear elevation faces Shelton Avenue. It has aluminum siding with exposed concrete masonry units at top. A metal awning covers a small one-over-one vinyl window with metal bars, a 6-panel door with storm door, and one-over-one vinyl window with metal bars. A brick planter extends along the south boundary at the rear. There are metal supports for missing signage.

The Feimster House is a side-gabled Craftsman-style house with a wide shed dormer across the façade. The foundation is stuccoed brick piers with concrete masonry unit infill. The house is sheathed in vinyl siding and has replacement six-over-six vinyl windows. The dormer may have had windows that have been covered with vinyl siding. The façade is three bays wide and has an engaged porch comprising the western portion. It has a wood deck with concrete steps leading up, groupings of small square section columns on brick piers, and wood railing. Under the porch are a typical window and a six-panel replacement door with an aluminum storm door. The east elevation is three bays wide, with a single window flanking a pair of windows; in the gable are pairs of windows. The west elevation has a pair of single windows at the lower level and a single window in the gable.

This ca. 1907 house is on one parcel with six other small houses—four total fronting Chambers Street and three others facing the railroad and former location of Railroad Avenue. White landowners D. A. and Carrie Miller purchased property between Chambers Street and the North Carolina Railroad in 1905 and 1909.²⁷ A ca. 1907 birds-eye illustration of Statesville shows a grouping of one-story gabled houses similar in size and orientation as the group of houses.²⁸ Residents of these houses, historically addressed with 200 numbers along Chambers Street and Railroad Avenue, are inconsistent in city directories, making them highly likely to be Black tenant occupied.²⁹ Carrie Miller sold the property in 1949 to white real estate agent and investor Frances G. Nicholson.³⁰

This one-story, side-gabled frame house was under renovation during survey. Layers of sheathing were visible, with vinyl siding partially installed over asbestos siding and original wood weatherboard. Gable vents are diamond shaped. The roof had new standing seam metal. Windows were one-over-one vinyl replacement, and the entry door was a nine-lite replacement. The hipped porch has new wood plank decking on concrete masonry unit foundation, wood square section posts and railing, and old asphalt shingle roofing. A gabled ell is located at the rear west. A shed addition off the ell at east has a concrete masonry unit foundation, a new wood porch, and is sheathed in vertical wood board.

Nicholson. The 1950 Sanborn map shows an L-shaped house matching the others on the property. An October 1951 fire which killed five members of the Murray family in the home next door (218 Chambers Street) charred the east elevation of the house. It was demolished, as no listing appears in the 1952-1953 city directory. In March 1954 Nicholson was granted a building permit for a “four-room frame residence” on Railroad Avenue.⁴² The house was extant when the 1954-1955 city directory survey was conducted, as it appears as the residence of Ophelia C. Gregory at 205 Railroad Avenue.

Site of Scotts Chapel Methodist Episcopal Church, which was located at what was the southeast corner of Chambers and S. Green Streets from ca. 1905 until moving to its current location at 316 Chambers Street. According to the 1950 Sanborn map, the church was one story with a 26-foot belfry; it was demolished by 1965 as it no longer appears in aerial imagery.

The parcel was also the location of the Frank and Julia S. Chambers House, which first appears on the 1925 Sanborn map as a one-story dwelling. They moved into a one-and-a-half-story dwelling nearby at 706 S. Green Street by 1932, when Frank died. The original Chambers House was converted to a shed by 1950 according to Sanborn maps.

Fannie Johnson Houpe was issued a building permit on September 1, 1950, to construct a "five-room asbestos shingle residence on Chambers street."⁵⁸ Fannie and her husband Percy lived there until her death in 1989. She worked as a domestic for private families and was later a custodian in Statesville City Schools. Fannie was a member of Mt. Pleasant AME Zion Church and was civically active. According to deed records, the Houpe family still owns the property.⁵⁹

The one-story side-gabled house has vinyl siding on three elevations and composite shingles on the façade under the porch. New siding was installed between 2014 and 2019 over the original asbestos shingles. The house sits on a concrete block foundation. A hip-roofed porch has turned wood posts, concrete deck on concrete masonry unit. Windows are replacement six-over-six vinyl with a picture window on the façade. The roof is asphalt shingle with a square brick chimney at the front slope of the roof east of the front door. A hipped ell at rear has a shed extension.

The vacant lot located south of Scotts Chapel United Methodist Church was historically the site of the Carrie E. Chambers House. Carrie Elizabeth Chambers was the daughter of Henry Jordan Caldwell Chambers, a notable Black leader in Statesville in the late nineteenth century. Henry was notable as the son of white planter Andrew Caldwell and an Irish indentured servant; he was enslaved after his father's death. Her mother was Letitia "Lettie" Moore, Henry's second wife and also the daughter of a white planter. Carrie was one of the first people in Statesville to receive Social Security benefits in 1938, and she died in 1972 aged 99.⁶¹ The Chambers House is shown on the 1925 Sanborn map as a one-story dwelling with full-width porch facing south toward the railroad and a smaller porch on its north elevation; a small one-story dwelling was located perpendicular to its west.

VACANT LOT – 307 Chambers Street

Currently an asphalt parking lot. The property was purchased by Scotts Chapel United Methodist Church in 1983. Sanborn maps show a one-story dwelling on the property in 1918, and two matching dwellings in 1925 which were expanded by 1930. The properties were rentals until being condemned by the City of Statesville in 1976 and were demolished by 1983.

This is the third location of the congregation, which was founded in October 1885 as Love Methodist Episcopal Church in the Belmont area near Statesville. Changes came in 1905 when a lot was purchased on the south side of Chambers Street, and the church also renamed to Scotts Chapel in honor of a member's father. The extant building was planned in 1956, with a groundbreaking ceremony held on September 26. A building permit was issued in November 1956, with G. L. Wilson Co. of Statesville as general contractor. The new facility was dedicated in February 1957. A gabled entry addition was made between 2014 and 2019 according to Google Street View; it replaced the original smaller gabled entry which had a simple broken pediment and recessed pair of 6-panel doors with six-lite transom. The extant stained glass windows replaced the original sash windows.⁶²

The northwest corner lot of Chambers and S. Elm Streets was purchased by Morningside High School teachers George F. Dalton and wife Martha Grady Dalton in 1948. The adjacent west lot, formerly the location of the hall for the Independent Order of Good Samaritans, was acquired by the Daltons in 1959. The hall was gone by 1950, as Sanborn maps show the lot to be vacant. The duplex was likely built by 1960, when the Daltons are listed as living at 325 Chambers and Dewey G. Pearson at 323 Chambers in the city directory.⁶³

The Ranch-style duplex was later converted to a four-unit property and remodeled in 2016. It has a hipped asphalt shingle roof and common bond with Flemish coursing brick veneer. The façade is two bays wide encompassing units A and B. Each bay has typical one-over-one vinyl replacement windows asymmetrically flanking the 9-lite replacement doors and brick and concrete stoop. Two brick chimneys rise at the roof ridge. The east elevation shows the site slope from the façade to the rear. It is two stories with two bays with typical windows at each level. The rear elevation faces north and is two stories in height and four bays wide. All four bays have entrances, with the first bay labeled unit C. The entrance to unit D is in the upper level of the second bay. The first bay features a typical six-panel replacement door at ground level with concrete stoop covered by a metal canopy with narrow metal supports. Typical windows flank the door, and a typical window and small typical window are in the upper level. The second bay has a metal staircase to unit D on the upper level. The upper level has a small typical window and typical door. At ground level is a small typical window and typical door. The third bay has a typical window and typical door at ground level, and a typical window in the upper level above the door. The fourth bay has a typical door flanked by a typical window and a small typical window at ground level. In the upper level are two small typical windows. A brick retaining wall is visible along the west property line.

Brick mason Thomas G. Biddings and his wife Gertrude Greenlee Biddings purchased the property from Mary Bell in 1894. Thomas was born enslaved in 1861. The Biddings raised their children in the home, and after their deaths in 1908 and 1930 respectively, son William Clarence Biddings, Sr. resided here. He worked as a presser at Sloan's Cleaners and Dyers and later owned Biddings Cleaners and Dyers. The final Biddings family member to own the house was William Clarence Biddings, Jr., who sold the home in 1986.⁶⁴

The Biddings House is a two-story frame I-house built on brick piers with brick foundation infill. The hip roof has pressed tin shingles and a tall centered gable with non-historic octagonal vent on the façade. The hipped porch has a concrete floor on brick foundation and Craftsman-style square section wood posts on brick piers. Recent replacement elements include one-over-one vinyl windows, vinyl siding, and a wood door with leaded glass oval lite and storm door. A one-story hipped ell extends from the northwest corner and has a covered porch extending from the east elevation.

Chambers-Watts House
Contributing Building
412 Chambers Street

ca. 1900, 2006

James Arthur Chambers and his family are listed in the 1900 U. S. Census as the household before that of Frank Belt, who lived across Chambers Street (413 Chambers Street). The parcel where the Chambers-Watts House is located was deeded to James Chambers from his father W.M.C.C. (Clay) Chambers in 1899. Clay Chambers was the son of Henry Jordan Caldwell Chambers, the son of white planter Andrew Caldwell and an Irish indentured servant, and his second wife Letitia “Lettie” Moore. After Emancipation, they resided on what was named Chambers Street after their family.⁶⁶ James Chambers moved to Tennessee around 1906 and deeded the property to his brother Fred Fisher Chambers.⁶⁷ The house was occupied by tenants until the property was purchased by Viola Shives Watts in 1951. Two of her children, Emma Lois Watts and Billy Louis Watts, were among the group arrested for staging a sit-in at the Howard Johnson's Restaurant in August 1962.⁶⁸

This one-story, side-gabled, frame residence sits on brick piers, with later concrete block foundation infill. It is covered with vinyl siding and an asphalt shingle roof. The wide gabled porch has concrete floor on concrete masonry unit foundation and square section wood posts. The steps are also concrete masonry unit with concrete ledges. The entry has six-over-six vinyl replacement windows and new four-panel entry door with fanlight and storm door. A brick chimney rises from the roof ridge and has a concrete cap. A single-bay wide east addition has shallowly sloped roof and has a wood porch and entrance. A full-width gabled ell extends off the rear. These two additions were made by 1965 according to aerial imagery; a smaller gabled ell at rear is extant on the 1930 Sanborn map. The house was renovated in 2006 according to property records.

Contributing Building
414 Chambers Street

The house at 414 Chambers Street first appears in the 1932-1933 Statesville city directory as the residence of Leo and Viola Nicholson. The property was owned by Ruth Gray Renwick, who bought it from James E. Tharpe in 1924. The Nicholsons rented the property until around 1948, when Wilfred Alexander and Ophelia Eccles Morrison moved in. The Morrisons purchased the property from Renwick in 1953, and the house has remained in the family.⁷⁰ Daughter Adrienne Morrison participated in the sit-in at the Howard Johnson's Restaurant in Statesville in August 1962.⁷¹

James Leon and Mary Belle Feimster built this 1.5-story Craftsman house by 1928, when they were first listed in the city directory as living at this address. They purchased the lot from M. E. and Alfred Fleming in 1919 and, according to city directories, rented in the area until they could afford to build their own house.⁷³ Leon held a variety of manual labor jobs, including janitor at City Hall, butler for a private family, and floor refinisher. Mary Belle Feimster died in 1949, and Leon remarried to Mary Elizabeth Kerr, who predeceased him in 1980. He died in 1984, and the house was sold outside the family.⁷⁴

The Feimster House is a one-and-a-half-story, side-gabled, frame Craftsman-style house. With an asphalt shingle roof. The foundation has brick piers with concrete masonry unit infill. The engaged porch has a concrete floor on concrete masonry unit foundation and groupings of square section columns—trios at the corners and pairs in the middle—on brick piers. Wrought iron railings span between the piers, and a brick sidewalk and steps with wood railing lead to the porch. A wood ramp has been built along the west elevation to access the front porch. The façade is three bays wide with a new six-panel door with a wrought iron door flanked by typical one-over-one vinyl replacement windows. The gabled dormer has a replacement vinyl three-lite horizontal sliding window. Vinyl siding and the windows were installed ca. 2005. The west elevation has a single shoulder brick chimney through the eave. A small wood frame shed is south of the house at its rear.

The Rutledge House is a two-story American Foursquare frame house on brick piers with asbestos siding and a pressed metal shingle hipped roof. Windows are largely original four-over-one wood sash. A hipped dormer with a pair of four-over-one wood windows is centered in the façade, which has a trio of windows under the porch and two pairs of windows with metal awnings in the upper level. The wood three-lite door may be original, and it has an aluminum storm door. The porch is accessed via brick steps from the south, west, and east. A brick chimney rises through the roof near the peak. The one-story porch has a concrete floor on brick foundation. Doric columns with wood railing support the hipped metal roof. The west elevation has a pair of hipped one-story projecting bays with pressed metal shingle roofs and trios of windows with metal awnings. The upper level has two pairs of windows, one original topped with a metal awning and the other replacement six-over-six vinyl windows. The east elevation is three bays wide, with single windows in each level of the first bay. The second bay has a window located between the two levels, ostensibly at a staircase landing. The third bay at the rear has a pair of short windows at the lower level and two single windows at the upper level.

He died suddenly in 1901 at age 40.⁸⁰ Katie sold the house in 1919 to H. G. and Kate Golden, who rented the property until selling it to Julia Howard in 1952. James and Elsie Carpenter were longtime renters.⁸¹

The Baucom House is a one-story side-gabled house with a new asphalt shingle roof. The house appeared to be undergoing repairs at the time of survey in July 2024. It is built on brick piers with concrete masonry unit infill. Wood weatherboard siding is installed atop vertical plank sheathing. Windows have been replaced with one-over-one vinyl. A series of shed additions have been made at the rear. The façade has a Triple A gable with pentagonal vent. The hipped porch has a concrete floor on brick foundation and square section posts and railing. The six-panel wood door does not appear original.

John Walker Stockton worked as an orderly at Davis Hospital and retired as a janitor from North Carolina National Bank. His poem "Hero or Heel" was included in My Favorite Poems, part of an anthology series by Exposition Press, published in 1944. Nera was a cook in a private home. The Stocktons owned the house until 1998; John died in 2000 and Nera in 2003.⁹¹

The Stockton House is one-story front-gabled Minimal Traditional bungalow located at the corner of Elm and Dockery Streets. The house faces east and is sited near the street intersection. The house is built on a concrete masonry unit foundation with asbestos sheathed wood framing and a new metal roof. The asbestos siding continues into the gable, which has a half-round vent in the façade. Original six-over-six wood sash windows are covered with metal storm windows. A brick one-shouldered chimney on the south elevation has decorative brick details in the stack. The front porch is located at the northeast corner and extends from the façade. It has a concrete walk leading from Elm Street to concrete steps with wrought iron railing. The porch has a concrete floor and trios of square section wood posts with wood lattice infill. A gabled vestibule has been added on to the west elevation and has one-over-one aluminum sash windows and an arched hood over the door.

Garage

The one-story detached garage/carport is sited behind the house and faces south with a concrete driveway from Dockery Street. The front-gabled roof has a metal roof and wood German siding in the gable. The building is two bays wide. The west bay is the original ca. 1956 garage constructed of concrete masonry units with no extant garage door. The east bay is a ca. 1968 carport; its slab is stepped down toward the house and has a brick knee wall around its east and north elevations. The roof is supported with decorative wrought iron posts, and metal siding has been installed at the north elevation atop minimal wood framing. A triangular section of driveway added to the original portion accesses this carport bay.

J. Troy Colvert, a mechanic, and Lottie Reaves Colvert purchased lot 10 of the Broad Street Presbyterian Church property in December 1952. The Colverts sold the property to the Hollidays in 1961.⁹²

The Colvert House is a one-story front-gabled building constructed of stuccoed concrete masonry units. The gable ends have asbestos siding and rectangular vents. The front gabled porch, built upon stuccoed concrete masonry units, has concrete stairs and wood railings to the concrete floor. The roof is supported by square section posts, and there are wood railings. Windows are replacement one-over-one vinyl sash.

Contributing Building
602 S. Elm Street

Elvert W. Cowan, Sr. and Zoreatha Cowan deeded to their son and daughter-in-law in 1964 a small parcel on S. Elm Street. Elvert Walter Cowan, Jr. married Theritha Byers in 1960. The house was likely built after they acquired the property in 1964, as the address does not appear in the 1962-1963 Statesville city directory. The Cowans lived in the house until before October 1980 and sold it in 1986.⁹³

This one-story, Minimal Traditional-style house is side gabled with an asphalt shingle roof and vinyl siding. It is built on a concrete masonry unit foundation. The low slope shed porch has a tongue and groove wood deck and square section wood posts. Most windows have been replaced with one-over-one vinyl windows, though some likely original aluminum slider windows are extant. The south gabled extension has a rear shed wing with an entry door. A brick chimney rises through the ridge near the north end of the building. A prefabricated metal shed stands southwest of the house.

Henry Clay Ijames and Allie Oakley Ijames purchased the parcel at 604 S. Elm Street in 1938 from the heirs of Lee Fraley. A house was likely extant, as Samuel Smyre and Grace Smyre are listed as residents in the city directory in 1932-1933. Henry worked at the Statesville Steam Laundry, and Allie was a housekeeper for a private family. They sold the property in 1961, by which time Henry had moved to Philadelphia and Allie to Forsyth County.⁹⁴

This one-story, side-gabled, frame Minimal Traditional-style house sits on a concrete masonry unit foundation and had its German weatherboard siding covered with vinyl between 2014 and 2022. The façade is three bays wide and a central wooden entry door is flanked by one-over-one vinyl replacement windows, can see original windows were taller as the openings have been filled. Concrete masonry unit chimney. Concrete porch on concrete masonry unit foundation has wrought iron supports, shed roof continues roof plane.

606 S. Elm Street

The chain of title could not be traced beyond 1948, when the heirs of Lee Fraley deeded the property to James A. Fraley. The house was extant on the 1925 Sanborn map. The Fraleys resided in the house until at least 1960. Arthur D. Cowan purchased the house in 1973. He resided in the house since ca. 1962, when he was hired as a full-time custodian at the Iredell County Health Department.⁹⁵

This front-gabled vernacular house is in deteriorating condition. It has a brick chimney with concrete cap extending through the south roof. The engaged porch has square section wood posts, and the tongue and groove wood deck has collapsed at the north side. What appear to be original four-over-four wood sash windows are obscured behind screens. The entry is a newer panel door. A shed extension at the rear has four-lite square windows.

The William Lee Cowan House was likely built by William Lee Cowan, who purchased the lot from Lee and Maggie Fraley in 1927. He lived in the house until his death in 1947. His heirs rented the property until selling it to John Robert Templeton and Lillian Gibson Templeton in 1979. Their son John R. Templeton, Jr. currently resides in the house.⁹⁶

The William Lee Cowan House is a one-story, front gabled house with elements of the Craftsman style built on brick piers with concrete masonry unit infill. It has a pressed metal shingle roof, exposed rafter tails in the eaves, and wood weatherboard siding. The façade has wood brackets at the lower eaves. The hipped porch has a concrete floor on brick pier with concrete masonry unit infill foundation and wood turned posts and railing. A concrete sidewalk leads to concrete masonry unit steps, and an aluminum ramp has been added from the street to the side of the porch. Brick chimney with terra cotta flues rise through the north and south portions of the roof. Windows are original four-over-one wood sash. The wood door has a storm door installed over.

The Morningside High School Classroom Building is located south of the original building and faces S. Elm Street. It is comprised of two sections, a one-story building facing S. Elm Street and a two-story addition at east. The classroom building has a flat roof and brick veneer. The west elevation is four bays wide. The north bay has a half-lite steel door with 4-lite transom above. The second bay has a wide steel door with 2-lite sidelights and 8-lite transom. A metal canopy extends over the sidewalk. The third and fourth bay each have a pair of large one-over-two windows. The north elevation is comprised entirely of vertical 12-lite metal sash windows. A vented brick equipment room with flat roof is located approximately halfway down the elevation, which extends to the perpendicular gymnasium/auditorium addition. The south elevation has three bays of large one-over-two windows and a shed extension. The extension has two steel doors with transoms on the west elevation and ten one-over-one metal sash windows across the south elevation.

Harris-Dalton House

Contributing Building

620 S. Elm Street

Silas Harris purchased a lot on S. Elm Street in 1924. He was issued a building permit for a "one-story frame dwelling on South Elm street, estimated cost, $1,200" in June 1925.⁹⁸ Harris worked at the Statesville Flour Mill. He and his wife Annie resided in the house until it was foreclosed upon and sold to First Building and Loan Association in 1931. The house was rented throughout the 1930s and sold to Fred Clark and Bessie Clark in 1940. The Clarks lived in the house for seven years before selling it to Horace Dalton and Bessie Dalton in 1946. Bessie died two months after, and Horace passed in 1951. The house remained in the family with the heirs of their daughter Annie Dalton Mattox.⁹⁹

The Harris-Dalton House is a one-story, hipped roof, Craftsman-style house with wood weatherboard siding and standing seam roof. It is built on brick piers with concrete masonry unit infill. The façade has an engaged porch with a concrete deck on concrete masonry unit and wrought iron supports and railing. The solid door has a wrought iron storm door. Windows are four-over-one original wood sash with metal storm windows over top. A small hipped dormer has two wood windows, one covered with plywood and the other missing glass. The brick chimney extends from the north slope of the roof. At the rear is a screened porch with steps on the south side. Eaves have exposed rafter tails.

Anna Lee Harris Williams Moore House

ca. 1902, ca. 1960

Contributing Building

624 S. Elm Street

A 1915 deed recorded that an Amanda Lee Williams purchased a one-eighth acre parcel "on which James (sic) Green builded and resided upon" on Green Street from George Steele.¹⁰⁰ Her name was likely recorded incorrectly on the deed, as she was known as Anna Lee Harris Williams, born in 1888 to Henry Harris and Virginia Summers Harris in Iredell County. Anna married twice—to Elijah Williams in 1904 and Benjamin Lum Moore, 25 years her senior, in 1919. Elijah died of pneumonia a few months before she purchased the property, while Benjamin passed two years after their marriage. Anna lived in the house until her death in 1965.¹⁰¹ Her only daughter, Mary Anna Williams, inherited the property. Mary was educated at Morningside High School and Shaw University, and she returned to teach at her alma mater as well as other schools in Statesville and Newton. She died in 1979, and her cousin Virginia Louise Glenn, who had lived with Anna, inherited the house. Virginia had graduated from Morningside High School and Shaw University before enlisting in the Women's Army Corps during World War II. She sold the property in 1980.¹⁰²

This one-and-a-half-story, side-gabled house has two shed dormers on the façade and windows in gables. The foundation is brick with concrete masonry unit infill. Windows are vinyl replacement six-over-six or one-over-one. Google Street View imagery from May 2014 shows that the house had a pressed tin roof and three-over-one wood windows in the dormer. The porch has concrete floor on concrete masonry unit, wrought iron supports and railing. The front door is a replacement with a wrought iron storm door. The roof is asphalt shingle, and the two dormers have pairs of windows. There are two brick chimneys—one which rises through the façade roof with a tall metal stovepipe cap, and the second at the eave on the north elevation at the rear shed ell. A ca. 1960 addition at the south was likely a carport later enclosed; it has a low slope shed roof and replacement door with fanlight and wrought iron gate.

Zettie E. Gibbs received a building permit on November 8, 1951, for a "four room frame residence on South Elm street."¹⁰³ Her mother Annie Gibbs purchased land which included the parcel in 1896 from Mary C. Bell. Zettie worked as a cook for private families and died in 1963. The house remained in the Gibbs family until 2023.¹⁰⁴

This one-story, side-gabled, Minimal Traditional-style house was under renovation at the time of survey and was recorded in August and September 2024. It has an asphalt shingle roof. Aluminum siding observed in August had been removed in September, exposing the original wood German siding. The foundation is stuccoed concrete masonry unit. Original six-over-six wood sash windows were been removed, and frames are currently empty. The façade has a gabled bay with window at the south and an engaged porch to the north with arched beam, concrete floor, and square section wood posts (two are missing- one from the northwest corner and one from the southwest corner). The front door is two panel six-lite wood with an adjacent window to the north. The north elevation had a pair of windows, a single shorter window, and gable vent. The south elevation had two windows flanking a shorter window and gable vent. The building was observed in May 2025 with sheathing removed and covered with housewrap.

Herman was a teacher and coach at Morningside High School, while Thellena taught in schools at Conover and Newton before retiring from Mulberry Street School in Statesville. The house was demolished before 2007.¹⁰⁵

The two-story house has a cross gabled roof with asphalt shingles. It is built on a concrete foundation and is sheathed in vinyl siding. The façade has a prominent two-story front gabled bay with projecting shed bay with two windows over a two-car garage opening. The gable has decorative brackets. The shed porch has a concrete floor, square section posts, and four lite farmhouse door.

Minor Revere Adams and Annie Beatrice Bailey Adams appear in the 1925-1926 Statesville city directory as residents of 678 S. Elm Street. In the 1930 U. S. Census, they are listed as owners of the house, valued at $2,000. They defaulted on a deed in trust in 1936, and the property was sold by the Virginia Finance Corporation to G. M. and Mattie Phelps.¹⁰⁷

The Adams-Phelps House is a one-and-one-half-story, front-gabled Craftsman house with an asphalt shingle roof and built on brick piers. Windows are a mix of original three-over-one wood sash and two-over-two, horizontal light wood sash. The hipped porch has concrete steps with knee wall and floor. It is supported by battered wood posts on brick piers at the center and brick piers at the corners and wrought iron railing spans between the piers. The façade has pairs of wood windows flanking the door. In the front gable are a pair of aluminum windows. The wood half-lite front door has a wrought iron storm door. The hipped porch at the rear has been enclosed. It has concrete steps and wood railing.

ca. 1923

Contributing Building

686 S. Elm Street

Sallie Adams Sherrill, wife of John Andrew Sherrill, was granted Lot 2 of the Adams property along South Elm Street in 1922. The house was likely built after this. Sherrill lived at 631 Walker Street (later Harrison Street), so listed residents of the house were renters. One family member, her son Andrew, lived there in 1928-1929. Sallie died in 1954, and the Sherrill family sold the property in 1986.¹⁰⁸

This one-story front gabled house has a standing seam metal roof, asbestos siding, and brick pier foundation with concrete masonry unit infill. Typical windows are four-over-one wood sash. The shed porch has wood decking and square section wood posts and railing. The replacement door has a wrought iron storm door and is flanked by typical windows. There are two brick chimneys—a larger rectangular chimney with brick cap through the south roof slope, and a smaller square chimney with terra cotta flue through the north slope. The north and south elevation each have two windows evenly spaced. At the rear is a shed ell.

Sanford Adams built this house before he died by ca. 1890. He purchased two parcels of land totaling one acre from Mary C. Bell in 1882.¹¹⁰ In 1922 his heirs including his widow Jennie Cowan Adams Feimster sought to divide his lands. Son Will Adams had been missing for at least fifteen years, so the Adams heirs pursued legal action to make a clear division. A one-third portion of interest in the parcel with "the dwelling house offices, out-houses, building and improvements thereon" was given to Jennie, though lots 3 and 4 with the house were assigned to daughter Ada Adams and Susie Adams Headen (or Heyden).¹¹¹ Ada and Susie deeded their interest in the property to the latter's daughter Annie Belle Heyden Withers in 1947 and 1966. Annie sold the property to Lucille W. Chipley, a neighbor who had been a long-term renter, in 1969.¹¹²

This one-story side gabled house is set below the street, as South Elm Street was built up when the bridge over the railroad was constructed in 1948. It is built on brick piers with concrete masonry unit infill, is sheathed in vinyl siding, and has an asphalt shingle roof. A prominent centered front gable with vent is over the hipped façade porch. Windows appear to be three-over-one wood sash, though many were hard to see. The porch has wood plank flooring and square section wood posts and railing. The front door appears to be wood with a storm door. Gable ells extend from the rear at the north and south ends. A tree had fallen on the south gable ell as observed in May 2025.

The Statesville Board of City Aldermen made final approval of plans to construct a bridge over the Southern Railway tracks at South Elm Street in March 1947. The bridge replaced a "one-horse crossing located about a block east of the proposed bridge."¹¹⁶ The bridge was built by Southern Railway and constructed of creosote timbers. It was finished in January 1948, though it did not open to traffic until after the city completed grading approaches and paving extensions of South Elm Street to Jefferson Street. The bridge provided safer access for students walking to Morningside School, but it also increased traffic in the neighborhood as large trucks and other vehicles could more easily access the industrial sites on Monroe Street. Owners along South Elm Street were compensated in 1949 for damage to their property in the construction of the graded approaches.¹¹⁷

The South Elm Street Bridge carries South Elm Street over three tracks of the Norfolk Southern Railroad. The substructure consists of creosote timber trusses on concrete pediments and concrete retaining wall on either end of the span. The superstructure of timber floor on steel I-beams supports the asphalt deck. Built on the superstructure is a wood plank on raised wood frame pedestrian sidewalk running along the east edge of the bridge. Horizontal wood railing is on either side of the bridge.

William Franklin "Will" Murdock, a carpenter, and Ola Lee Murdock purchased lot 59 of the Tomlin property in September 1945; it is unknown if the house was extant, as the grantor was the estate of white landlord Isidore Wallace. Will was granted a building permit in 1956 to enclose the back porch and convert it into a room.¹¹⁹ They lived in the house until after Ola's death in 1963, when the property was sold to Rama Cowles and Alberta Hewitt Bruner. Rama worked as a taxi driver for Barney Ramsey until purchasing a taxi license to operate Bruner's Taxi Service on South Center Street.¹²⁰

The Murdock-Bruner House is a one-story, front-gabled brick veneer house built on brick foundation. Typical windows are one-over-one vinyl replacement. The partial-width, front gabled porch has a brick-edged concrete floor and square section wood posts on brick piers. The gable has horizontal wood composite paneling.

VACANT LOT – William and Ola D. McClelland House, 506 Falls Street

Concrete steps and metal railing at Falls Street are extant. Built by William McClelland and Ola Dalton McClelland, the house first appears on the 1930 Sanborn map as a one-story frame building. The house was demolished ca. 2001 according to property records but is still owned by McClelland descendants.

Effie L. Morrison and Clarence Morrison sold lots 60, 61, 73, and 74 of the Tomlin plat to Dr. Edward A. McDowell in 1950.¹²² Local builder W. C. York was granted a permit to construct “two duplex apartments” on “East Fall Street” in July 1956, likely this building and the identical one at 517-517 Falls Street.¹²³ Dr. McDowell was a native of Statesville who attended Morningside High School, Johnson C. Smith University, and Meharry Medical College in Nashville. He practiced medicine in Philadelphia and died in 1967. His estate sold the property to white landlords E. Julian Webb and Irene Webb in 1976.¹²⁴

This one-story, front-gabled frame duplex is built on a concrete masonry unit foundation and is sheathed in German wood siding with an asphalt shingle roof. Windows are a mix of six-over-six wood sash and one-over-one vinyl replacement. The hipped front porch has a concrete floor and square section wood posts and railing. The façade is four bays wide, with the entries to the individual units flanked by windows. The first bay has a replacement window, and the second bay has a five-panel wood door. The third bay has a six-lite wood door with wood screen door, and the fourth bay has a wood sash window. The south elevation has a replacement window, wood window, and smaller wood window. There are exposed rafter tails at the eaves. Two brick chimneys extend from the roof ridge near the front and rear of the building. This building is identical to the duplex at 515-517 Falls Street.

White landlords Sherrill R. Holland, Jr. and Winnifred L. Holland purchased lot 63 of the Tomlin plat in August 1961 from Clarence and Effie L. Morrison, who lived next door at 533 Falls Street. The house was built for Black tenants ca. 1963 according to tax records, and the address does not appear in the 1962-1963 Statesville city directory.¹²⁸ The Hollands sold the property to Sallie Holland Taylor in July 1974. Sallie was the daughter of Will Holland and Addie White Holland. She was a graduate of Morningside High School who resided in Columbus, Ohio. Her brother Theodore R. "Bub" Holland was living in the house when he passed in April 1974, and it is likely that her mother Addie also resided there until moving to Ohio. She owned the property until 1988, when she sold it to Allen F. Morrison, son of Clarence and Effie, and Karen M. Morrison, who lived at 533 Falls Street.¹²⁹

This house is a one-story frame building constructed on a concrete masonry unit foundation and sheathed in wood weatherboard siding. The side-gabled roof is asphalt shingle. A shed extension of the roof comprises the porch and is supported by turned wood posts on a concrete slab. Windows are two-over-two wood sash. A shed porch is located on the south elevation. A single shoulder brick chimney rises through the eave at the south elevation.

GARFIELD STREET

VACANT LOT – Odd Fellows Hall, 111 Garfield Street

Built by 1918 as a two-story building which served as the meeting hall for the Independent Order of Odd Fellows in the upstairs section and commercial space on the ground level. Businesses which operated here included Citizens Cash Grocery, Byers Drug Store, and Jimmie's Barber Shop. The building was demolished after 1965 and before 1983, and the parcel is part of the parking lot for Mt. Pleasant AME Zion Church.

VACANT LOT – James W. and Fannie N. Nesbit House, 113 Garfield Street

Former location of a one-story side-gabled dwelling demolished after June 2022. The house was owned by Mt. Pleasant AME Zion Church, and longtime renters were James W. Nesbit and Fannie Neal Nesbit. The building later housed the Statesville District Office of the AME Zion Church.

VACANT LOT – Lee O. and Madge W. Martin House, 114 Garfield Street

Lee O. Martin, a tailor, and Madge White Martin purchased the property in 1901, which according to a 1900 Sanborn map had a one-story dwelling. Lee died in 1938, and Madge died in 1947. The 1950 Sanborn map shows a two-story dwelling with basement. The building was demolished after May 2014 by Public Service Company of North Carolina due to contamination from the former gas works at 615 S. Center Street.¹³¹

VACANT LOT – 116 Garfield Street

A one-story dwelling first appeared on the 1930 Sanborn map. It was extant until after October 2007, when street imagery shows a one-story side-gabled frame house above street level with concrete retaining wall and steps at sidewalk.

A two-story frame house with hipped roof was built by ca. 1925 by Carter Carson, a waiter at the Vance Hotel, and Sue Hunt Carson. Sue died in 1934 and Carter in 1955.¹³² After advertisement for a potential conversion to apartments, the property was sold in 1965 by the Carson heirs to the Skyline Banner Elks Lodge No. 316. Organized in 1946, the lodge met in a house across Garfield Street for the previous seventeen years. In 2010 the Elks sold the property to Mt. Pleasant AME Zion Church. The property was flagged as dilapidated by the City of Statesville in 2018, and the house was demolished.¹³³ Only concrete steps and wrought iron railings at Garfield Street are extant.

2 VACANT LOTS – Commercial Building, 120 Garfield Street

Two vacant lots, one fronting Garfield Street and another to the south, were the site of a two-story building which first appeared in the 1911 Sanborn map. The Odd Fellows Hall was here in the 1909-1910 city directory until 1918, when they moved to a new building on Garfield Street. The property was home to many businesses over the years, including cobbler William P. McClelland, the office of the Mutual Burial League, the Blue Light Café, and Howard's Beauty Shoppe. The building was demolished after 1965, when it last appeared in aerial imagery.

The property, then addressed 121 Garfield Street, was acquired by Dr. R. S. Holliday and Mary C. Holliday in 1945. Sanborn maps up to 1950 as well as a 1941 aerial photograph show a side-gabled one-story building in this location. City directories show the property as occupied or extant until 1960-1961, when it was not listed. In the 1962-1963 city directory, 123 Garfield Street was occupied by the family of Rosa L. Robertson, indicating that the extant building was built by this date. In 1981 Mt. Pleasant AME Zion Church purchased the property from the Holliday estate.¹³⁴

The property, which had a one-story duplex addressed 126-128 Garfield Street, was purchased in 1945 by Frances G. Nicholson, a white real estate agent.¹³⁵ In May 1956 Nicholson received a permit to “build one seafood market.”¹³⁶ Lewis Seafood Market opened in July 1956 and operated at the location until moving to S. Center Street and Bell Street in October 1957. In November 1958 Erskine L. Johnson, Jr. asked city council to amend the blue laws to allow operation of a coin-operated automatic laundry in the building, but the measure was unanimously voted down.¹³⁷ Nicholson sold the property to Paul S. Grier, Jr., a white former Statesville resident living in South Carolina, in 1966. The Econo-Wash (or Econ-O-Wash) laundromat opened in the space by 1969 and operated at least through 1981.¹³⁸

The one-story, side-gabled asphalt shingle roof is asymmetrical, giving a mansard appearance at the façade. The façade is five bays wide with two replacement 9-lite doors in the first and fourth bays. The second, third, and fifth bays have original metal frame windows, unglazed due to broken glass. The concrete masonry unit exterior has been stuccoed.

The property was acquired by Dr. R. S. Holliday and Mary C. Holliday in 1928. A one-story frame building was recorded on the site on the 1930 Sanborn map. A 1941 aerial photograph shows the current one-story front-gabled house, with the lot appearing cleared of grass suggesting that the building was either under construction or recently completed. The 1944-1945 city directory is the first to record the duplex as 127-129 Garfield Street.¹³⁹

This one-story, front-gable frame house features a brick foundation, German wood siding, and asphalt shingle roof. The shed porch has brick foundation with concrete floor and wrought iron supports. A wood ramp to the porch is built over the steps. Brick chimneys pierce the roof slope on the east and west sides. Windows include a mix of original six-over-six wood sash windows and six-over-six vinyl replacement windows.

Rankin's Barber Shop
Contributing Building
131 Garfield Street

ca. 1967

Barber Leon Rankin and cosmetologist Mary Dula Rankin purchased the property in 1967. Up through the 1950 Sanborn map, a one-story house had been extant. Shortly after purchase, Rankin requested the Statesville Planning and Zoning Board rezone the site from residential to business “for a barber shop.”¹⁴⁰ A native of Iredell County, Rankin attended Fayetteville State University. He served in the military during World War II, after which he enrolled at Modern Barber College in Winston-Salem. Upon moving to Statesville, he worked at Littlejohn’s Sanitary Barber Shop and Jimmie’s Barber Shop before opening his own business. Rankin was an active civic leader, serving as an officer in the NAACP and as a commissioner for the Statesville Housing Authority.¹⁴¹

This commercial building is a one-story, front-gable, concrete masonry unit building with a running bond brick façade. Window lintels and sills are brick. Façade has replacement nine-lite 2-panel steel door, original window opening has infill vinyl siding with replacement vinyl 2-lite window. West elevation has entrance approached by wood ramp with wrought iron railing and similar replacement door as façade. Asphalt shingle roof and wide wood weatherboard in gable. Basement has small window. Thru-wall AC units at side elevations.

137A-B Garfield Street

A 1907 birds eye view map of Statesville shows two houses in the approximate location of this parcel sited as they appear today. The earliest Sanborn map to show this portion of Garfield Street dates to 1918, which shows the building as 139 Garfield Street. In the 1920 U. S. Census, the family of Mattie Howard was listed as renters at this address.¹⁴² In 1932 the owners defaulted on the parcel, with the deed noting, "On this lot is two dwelling houses."¹⁴³

This one-story-on-basement, cross-gabled residence has an asphalt shingle roof and is sheathed in vinyl siding. It has been converted to a duplex with one unit at street level and the other in the basement level. The façade has a prominent gable bay extending from the side-gabled two-story portion of the house and a shed porch at its west elevation. The street level unit is approached by a concrete walkway from the Garfield Street sidewalk to the newly rebuilt shed porch with concrete masonry unit foundation, wood decking, railing, and square section posts. The new porch was nearly doubled in width when rebuilt by expanding to the west. A new four-lite two-panel farmhouse door and replacement vinyl windows (a mix of one-over-one and six-over-six) have been installed. The site slopes down sharply from the sidewalk, with a parged masonry foundation at the facade. The basement unit is accessed at the east elevation under a shed porch with concrete floor and square section wood posts. A shed ell extends from the north/rear elevation.

Built by Angus and Ida Littlejohn after his barber shop burned in a large fire along S. Center Street in January 1923. The Littlejohns purchased a lot on Garfield Street from R. D. and Eliza Watts. They built a two-story building in which the family resided and operated businesses, as well as a house next door that was rented. In the 1925-1926 Statesville city directory, Ida operated Littlejohn's Café at the property while Angus and son William ran a barber shop on South Center Street. Commercial space was also rented out to dentist V. R. "Dock" Davis and real estate agent Chavis Renwick.¹⁴⁷ Angus died in 1926 and Ida in 1927. William, who lived in Wallacetown and became principal at Rocky Knoll School, rented out the properties. Rev. Anderson Ballard Smoot operated a grocery store here in 1928-1929 according to the city directory. After this date the property was converted to rental housing, with Hattie Knox and her family listed as renters. According to the 1940-1941 city directory, the property had been converted to a duplex.¹⁴⁸

Built by Angus and Ida Littlejohn ca. 1923 after Littlejohn's barber shop burned in a large fire along S. Center Street in January 1923. The Littlejohns purchased a lot on Garfield Street from R. D. and Eliza Watts. They built the house and a two-story building next door at 142-144 Garfield Street. In the 1925-26 Statesville city directory, dentist V. R. "Dock" Davis lived in the house and maintained his practice next door at 144 Garfield Street. Angus died in 1926 and Ida in 1927. The property was inherited by son William, who converted it into a rental property. In the 1930 U. S. Census, the family of James Turner were listed as renters. It is now a duplex.¹⁴⁹

This one-story-on-basement, front-gabled building has a stuccoed foundation. It is sheathed in vinyl siding with a standing seam metal roof. Typical windows are one-over-one vinyl sash. The façade has a prominent gabled enclosed porch. The main level is accessed by a wood deck with railing at the east elevation and replacement fanlight door with flanking typical window. The façade has three pairs of typical windows, and the west elevation has a pair of typical windows. The basement level is two bays wide. The east bay has an infilled window adjacent to a damaged wood door with storm door. The west bay has a replacement door with storm door and typical window. There are two chimneys through the roof plane, a larger stuccoed chimney at east and a square brick chimney at west. Six-over-six wood sash windows remain on the main level of the side elevations.

The primary entrance is not visible from the right-of-way. The foundation is clad in architectural stone. Windows are one-over-one vinyl sash.

VACANT LOT – Arthur T. and Mary H. Peterson House, 202 Garfield Street

The one-story dwelling was demolished in 1987 according to tax records. Stone retaining wall and steps are extant. Arthur Torrence Peterson was a co-founder of Peterson & Mangum Funeral Home. The 1925 Sanborn map shows a one-story frame house with porch at 202 Garfield Street. Rev. John D. Peterson, son of Arthur and Mary H. Peterson, purchased the property in 1940. The funeral home relocated from South Green Street to the adjacent property at 206 Garfield Street in 1943.¹⁵⁰

The former Peterson & Mangum Funeral Home is located above street level, and there is a brick retaining wall at the sidewalk. Two runs of brick stairs lead to the entry. This unusual two-story running bond brick veneer building has a low-pitched hipped roof with exposed rafter tails and a stuccoed chimney near the peak. Typical windows are one-over-one wood sash, but many are broken or covered with plywood. Fenestration at the main level has soldier row lintels, and brick sills at both levels. The asymmetrical façade is three bays wide. The east bay has a square opening in the main level, formerly a trio of windows, and a single typical window above. The entry bay has an inset doorway with hipped bracketed hood with a polygonal bay window above. The bay window has narrow typical windows, with two in the façade face, and weatherboard siding below. The west bay has typical windows aligned. A brick porch extends across the façade and has wrought iron railing at the west end.

Ethel Barrett Greene was issued a building permit in October 1949 for a "one story cement block structure 14 by 30 feet at the rear of 225 Garfield street to be used as a beauty shop."¹⁶⁰ According to city directories, she operated the shop at her home at 625 Nassau Place in 1952-1953 before moving to the Garfield Street location. Ethel moved to the house in front of her shop by 1957. The building was listed as two stories on the 1950 Sanborn map, and city directories list residents for the address in the upstairs apartment unit.¹⁶¹

Greene's Beauty Nook is a one-and-a-half-story building constructed of concrete masonry units on the main level and frame with vinyl siding on the upper level. It has a gabled asphalt shingle roof. The upper level is accessed by wood stairs and deck on the north elevation. The original primary entrance (presumably on the first-floor east elevation) is not visible from the public-right-of-way. Windows are one-over-one vinyl replacement.

The Moore-Black House is a one-story frame house which has substantial additions to the rear and west side. Sanborn maps and aerial images show the building was altered from a dwelling with full-width porch and small ell at west rear in 1918 and 1925. The 1930 and 1950 Sanborn maps show the building with similar footprint, but several alterations—a front porch not quite full-width, the west rear ell expanded at south and west, and a longer east rear ell constructed with porch between the ells. Aerial images and photographs from ca. 1955 show the roofline altered to its current appearance. Property records note that the building was remodeled in 1994, when the west addition was made, and renovated in 2020-2021. The primary portion is built on brick piers with concrete masonry unit infill, and additions have concrete masonry unit foundation. The side-gabled roof has asphalt shingles, and the house is sheathed in vinyl siding. Windows are vinyl replacement. The façade is four bays wide, with the engaged shed porch comprising the first two bay. It has a concrete floor and square section wood posts, and there is a pair of windows and a replacement door with wrought iron storm door. The third bay has a single window, and the exposed foundation shows this is an older section of the house. The fourth bay also has a single window in a new gabled ell, which has a window and octagonal louvered vent in the gable. The rear of the house has paired French doors with wood deck and a window on its west elevation. A concrete block wall runs along the front yard.

229 Garfield Street

The Frink-Grant House is located on land formerly owned by the Wood family. Mary Belle Woods Frink Tomlin was the daughter of Robert and Jane Clark Woods, who had lived in a house at 227 Garfield Street just behind the new Frink residence. Mary Belle operated the Skyland Hotel boarding house at 625 S. Meeting Street Alley in the 1920s-1940s. In the 1948-1949 city directory, she and her second husband George Frink lived at the Skyland Hotel while George's brother and sister-in-law William and Mary Frink are listed as living at 229 Garfield Street.¹⁶³ The house was likely built by nephew Henry Ford Woods, who was granted a building permit in June 1946 to construct "an eight-room dwelling of concrete blocks on Garfield street."¹⁶⁴ Mary Belle died in 1965, and Kenneth Louis Grant and Elaine Delores Grant purchased the property from her estate. Kenneth was a graduate of Unity High School who served over twenty years in the U. S. Army.¹⁶⁵

William H. and Mildred M. Littlejohn House ca. 1909

Contributing Building

238 Garfield Street

Harriet Ennis, who is listed in the 1909-1910 city directory at the address, may have built the house at 238 Garfield Street. She purchased the property with her husband Cornelius in 1884 from Mary C. Bell.¹⁶⁷ The trustees of the Center Street AME Zion Church purchased it in 1915 to serve as a parsonage. Among the pastors who lived in the residence were Rev. D. E. Thompson, Rev. H. E. Wilson, Rev. W. A. Stewart, and Rev. I. J. Jackson. The church added three rooms to the house in 1928 according to building permit records.¹⁶⁸

William Henry Littlejohn and Mildred Madaline McDowell Littlejohn purchased the house in 1935 and were longtime residents. William was a teacher who received degrees from Livingstone College and Columbia University. He taught at Unity High School for the entirety of its operation from 1942-1962, where he was the first Black drivers education teacher in Iredell County. He also owned and operated Littlejohn's Barber Shop. William served on the Statesville Recreation Commission and board of directors of Iredell Memorial Hospital and was appointed by Gov. Dan K. Moore to the Advisory Committee of the North Carolina Good Neighbor Council. Mildred was also a teacher and graduate of Livingstone College. She also earned a Master of Arts degree from Pennsylvania State University and a professional diploma in special childhood education from Teachers College of Columbia University. Mildred taught at Morningside Elementary School and served as assistant principal.¹⁶⁹

The second bay has a one-over-one vinyl window at the main level, and the third bay has a nine-lite door with aluminum storm door. The fourth bay is front-gabled with two six-over-six vinyl windows with siding and a louvered vent in the gable. In the upper level gabled end of the primary mass is a pair of three-over-one wood sash windows. The west elevation has an asymmetrical gabled porte cochere, added after 1956 according to aerial imagery, with wood weatherboard upper section supported by battered wood posts on brick piers. The porte cochere covers the main level with two one-over-one vinyl replacement windows. In the gable of the primary mass is a pair of three-over-one wood sash windows with metal canopy. A brick chimney with corbel detail at top rises through the west eave of the primary mass of the house.

Dr. Robert S. & Mary Charlton Holliday House 1918-1919
Contributing Building
241 Garfield Street

The American Foursquare home of Dr. Robert Sumner Holliday and Mary Charlton Holliday is the most prominent and highest integrity residential resource in the district. The dwelling appears to retain most original materials, including weatherboard and shingle siding, windows and other fenestration, and the pressed tin shingle roof. The Holliday House also has an extant contributing garage. The Hollidays owned numerous residential and commercial properties in the district, including the Holliday Building on South Center Street and single-family and duplexes on Garfield Street, South Green Street, Newton Avenue, Broadway Court, and S. Elm Street.

The Holliday House was built in 1919 for Dr. Robert Sumner Holliday and educator Mary Augusta Charlton Holliday, who were both among the most notable and influential residents of the neighborhood. Dr. Holliday was the primary doctor serving the medical needs of Black residents for many years. Mary was supervisor of schools for rural Black children in Iredell County.

Dr. Holliday was born in 1875 in Fayetteville. He graduated from Lincoln University in Pennsylvania in 1898. He attended medical school at Leonard Medical College in Raleigh, graduating in 1905, and trained at hospitals in Philadelphia and Pittsburgh. He was licensed in North Carolina in 1908, and in June the local newspaper reported that he paid a special privilege tax on June 15, 1908, to practice medicine in Iredell County. Dr. Holliday served the Black community of Statesville for over fifty years. In addition to his private practice, which he conducted from the Garfield Street house, he provided public health services to the community including vaccination and medical clinics at Morningside School. Dr. Holliday was a founder of the Piedmont Medical Society and member of the Old North State Medical, Dental and Pharmaceutical Society.¹⁷⁰

Mary was born March 16, 1893, in Draper, Virginia. She was the daughter of Sarah Miller Hunter and James Albert Hunter, a brakeman for Norfolk and Western Railroad. Her father may have died when she was an infant, as her mother married William Manning Charlton in 1894. Mary attended Hampton Institute, graduating with honors in 1911. She moved to North Carolina and served as supervisor of rural Black schools in Columbus County for four years. In 1916 Mary came to Iredell County as the county supervisor of Black rural schools. She was funded by the Jeanes Foundation, founded by a wealthy Philadelphia heiress to support Black teachers in the South. When Mary arrived in Iredell County, rural Black children were educated at 39 one-teacher schools. Buildings were inadequate, and there was little or no transportation for students. Mary organized "Better Homes Clubs" and homemaking classes for adults and coordinated the organization of a county Parent Teacher Association. Under Mary's supervision, a School Improvement Program built Rosenwald Schools in several communities, small schools were consolidated, Unity High School was opened to serve rural Black students, and transportation was provided, ushering in a new era of progress for Iredell County. Mary served as state president of the North Carolina Congress of Colored Parents and Teachers and served on many boards of the North Carolina Teachers Association. During the Roosevelt Administration, Mary was honored as one of the Ten Outstanding Women in the World for her achievements in rural education. She earned a master's degree from Columbia University in 1943, and during summers she taught at Tuskegee University and other HBCUs. She retired in 1956 after over forty years of service in Iredell County.¹⁷¹

Two months after they married in November 1910, Clyde Thomas White and Annie Ozella Byers White purchased the property from Harriet Ennis. It is unknown if the house was extant, but the White family appears in the 1914-1915 Statesville city directory as living in the residence. A one-story house with full-width porches on front and rear first appears on the 1918 Sanborn map, and by 1930 additions had been made to the rear flanking a smaller porch.¹⁷³ Clyde and Ozella added the surname Blackwell to their name at least by 1930, when they were living in Manchester, Vermont, where Clyde worked for the Equinox House hotel as a doorman. Ozella's brother James lived in the house for a time while they were in the north.¹⁷⁴ The family owned the house until 2006.

The White Blackwell House is a one-and-a-half-story house with Colonial Revival massing built on brick foundation. It is sheathed in vinyl siding and has pressed tin shingles on the hipped roof with platform. There are two brick chimneys, one through the east roof plane and another at the rear of an ell at the west elevation. The nearly full-width shed porch was enclosed ca. 1999 and has pairs of six-over-six vinyl windows flanking the entry door. Above is a hipped dormer with a one-over-one vinyl replacement window, smaller than the original fenestration with infill trim around it.

The 1930 Sanborn map shows a one-story frame dwelling facing S. Green Street. Owned by Caesar Allison, a Baptist preacher and founder of First Baptist Church, he purchased the property in 1889 from Mary C. Bell. Caesar was found deceased in his home in August 1933, aged 86. His widow Cora Allison, who lived in Los Angeles, conveyed the property to undertaker St. Charles Rutledge, possibly as payment for her estranged husband's funerary costs.¹⁷⁷ Rutledge sold the property to Lee A. Fraley and Maggie Holman Fraley, who built this house ca. 1936 according to property records. Lee worked as a school janitor and for the white Allison family until his death in 1938. Daughter Florence Fraley Davidson lived in the home with her mother, who died in 1961, and until her own passing in 1969.¹⁷⁸ Also on the parcel at the corner of Garfield and S. Green Street (301 Garfield Street) was a one-story store, extant through at least 1956 according to aerial imagery.

This one-story, front-gabled brick veneer house has an asphalt shingle roof. The façade is three bays wide with a typical one-over-one vinyl replacement, a wood four-panel two-lite door with storm door, and pair of typical windows. The shed porch has brick steps to the concrete floor and wrought iron supports and railing. Side elevations have centered projecting shed bays, with two typical windows on the east elevation and a pair of typical windows on the west elevation. A ca. 1985 addition at rear is sheathed in vinyl siding and has an entrance with wood deck.

First Baptist Church Classroom Building

This building is the only remaining resource from the original site of First Baptist Church at the corner of Garfield and S. Green Street, addressed 601 S. Green Street. The parcel originally spanned along Garfield Street and included the First Baptist Church Parsonage, a two-story dwelling built ca. 1915 at 310 Garfield Street, a one-story Sunday School building at 312 Garfield Street, and three accessory buildings. The extant building at 306 Garfield Street replaced a ca. 1925 small frame dwelling used by the church as classroom space.¹⁷⁹ A building permit was granted in June 1948 for a "new Sunday School annex" to be "one-story brick with eight rooms."¹⁸⁰ The church sold the property in 1972, and it was converted into residential usage.

Arthur Williams and Dora Cornelia Grinton Williams purchased the property from Rev. Oscar J. Allen, pastor of First Baptist Church who lived across the street at in the First Baptist Church Parsonage, in 1918. A house may have been extant, as they assumed a mortgage of $445. The 1918 Sanborn map shows a one-story house with full-width porch matching the footprint of the extant building.¹⁸² Arthur worked as a janitor and headed the Black volunteer fire brigade. Dora died in 1932, and Arthur lived to age 90 and passed in 1975. Daughter Clara Williams Nesby was a graduate of Morningside School and Shaw University. She taught for over forty years in Statesville schools, including 31 years at Morningside starting in 1926, and retired in 1968 from Race Street School. Clara was the first local Black person employed by Statesville city schools. She was also the first Black woman in Iredell County to be appointed a notary public in 1947. Clara retired from teaching in 1968, after which she and husband William sold the house and moved to Winston-Salem.¹⁸³

The Williams-Nesby House is a one-story, front-gabled frame house built on a brick foundation and sheathed in aluminum siding, installed in 1989 according to property records, with a corrugated metal roof. The gable has a large square vented opening. Windows are two-over-two wood sash. The shed porch has a concrete floor on brick foundation and wrought iron supports and railing. The façade has a pair of typical windows and single window flanking the off-center diamond-lite wood entry door with storm door. Brick chimneys are located in the roof ridge near the front and at the rear.

In July 1953 the City of Statesville purchased property at the northeast corner of Garfield and South Elm Streets for the development of a swimming pool, recreation center, bath houses, basketball courts, and softball fields for Black residents. The ribbon cutting ceremony in June 1954 featured Mayor J. Garner Bagnal and Morningside High principal A. B. Rutherford. While primarily recreational, Garfield Street Park also hosted political events, such as in October 1954 when Congressman Hugh Alexander spoke in the recreation hall. Each year, hundreds of Black children took swimming lessons at Garfield Street Park's swimming pool. All but the basketball courts were razed in the 2000s as the park was redeveloped.¹⁹³

Garfield Park encompasses approximately 2.2 acres over five parcels located between Garfield, South Elm, and Falls Streets. The L-shaped park has a gabled pavilion, bathroom building, and asphalt parking lot at the southwest portion of the parcels. The linear eastern parcel steps down to the concrete basketball court along Garfield Street, while the ca. 2011 playground is level with the other features. The eastern edge of the parcel slopes down to Falls Street. The park is shaded by mature trees along its northern edges.

prominent employer of teachers and other educated personnel, whose homes in the neighborhood share this significance.

The first public school for Black students in Statesville opened in 1891 adjacent to Green Street Cemetery. The two-room frame building was destroyed by fire on March 9, 1916, and a two-story brick building opened in 1921 at the same location at 611 South Green Street. In 1942 Morningside High School was built at the corner of Garfield and South Elm Streets to house the growing high school student population. The high school served Black students in Statesville until May 1968, and students transferred to Statesville Senior High School. The former high school, renamed after longtime principal Alan D. Rutherford, remained open as an elementary school until 2002. Today, it houses offices for Iredell-Statesville Schools staff.¹⁹⁴

The Morningside High School site includes two brick buildings, Morningside High School and the Morningside High School Classroom Building (619 S Elm Street). All but the original 1942 building were designed by local architect Tom H. Hutchins. The Morningside High School building at the north end of the complex consists of the original 1942 building with a 1949 gymnasium/auditorium addition. Students in the masonry class helped construct a 1957 addition to the south side of the gymnasium/auditorium. The addition included a ten-foot expansion of dressing room space and construction of a second floor for a band room and utility room/classroom. Additions were made to the east of the gymnasium/auditorium in 1954 and 1964, consisting of a one-story-with-basement addition and a two-story addition with science laboratories. The complex also includes 1948 athletic fields and a 1952 concession stand behind the school at the south end of the parcel.¹⁹⁵

The primary façade of the original school building faces north and features a one-story, four bay wide, 1942 building to the west and a one-story, six bay wide, 1949 entrance addition to the east. It is six bays wide and one bay deep. Typical windows are horizontal 4-lite metal sash, which are paired in the 1949 portion. The east end of the 1949 addition has two inset brick sections, possibly originally opened and later enclosed, flanking a pair of typical windows. The entrance is distinguished by a slightly projecting brick bay, topped by a cast stone lintel. The inset entrance has a pair of 6-lite metal doors. A metal canopy has been added. The entrance is flanked by pairs of typical windows. The next three bays on the 1942 portion feature four typical windows with two round cast stone medallions above. The final bay to the west bay has a typical window. The west elevation faces S. Elm Street and has a recessed doorway with paired steel doors flanked by brick rowlock and stretcher framing with cast stone cornerstones. Three round cast stone medallions are evenly distributed above. A metal canopy extends from the doorway and along the sidewalks parallel to the elevation.

The 1949 gymnasium/auditorium addition extends perpendicular from the east elevation of the original building to the south. It is comprised of the main entrance to the school (as described above), the gymnasium/auditorium, and a two-story section at the south end. The gymnasium/auditorium is eight bays deep, with each bay delineated by a cast-stone capped brick pilaster. The first two bays have no fenestration with 1951-1952 classroom addition extending east. The remaining bays have 12-lite metal sash windows high in the elevation. Two bays have paired metal doors, and the last bay has A/C ductwork through the window. The two-story section is four deep. The north three bays have one-over-one metal sash windows at the main level and three horizontal metal sash 4-lite windows in the upper level. The fourth bay has a metal door in the main level and a horizontal metal sash 4-lite window above. The south elevation is six bays wide with the west bay stepped down. The first four bays have infilled brick openings at the main level and four horizontal metal sash 4-lite windows. At the fifth bay is a wood door with transom in the upper level. A metal staircase leads down with a landing at the sixth bay, which has a wood door at the upper level.

The one-story-on-basement classroom addition is located east of the original building and gymnasium/auditorium addition. The site slopes down to the east, and the lower level of the classroom addition is below grade while the upper level connects to the adjacent original building. It has two sections, with the 1954 first section aligned with the façade of the 1949 addition and the 1964 second section stepped forward. The first section has three bays. The first bay has a pair of horizontal 6-lite metal sash windows at the basement level at the first level and horizontal 4-lite metal sash windows at the upper level. The second bay has fenestration at the basement level and inset brick at the upper level. The third bay has pairs of horizontal 4-lite windows at the upper level, and at the basement level are a horizontal 6-lite window and steel door with transom. The second section is two bays wide, with each bay at the upper and basement level having groupings of five horizontal 6-lite metal sash windows. The east elevation has a steel door in the basement level at the northeast corner and steel door with canopy at the upper level.

The interior has high degree of integrity with retained double-loaded corridor, transoms, wood floors in original section, and bathrooms.

Classroom building

The Morningside High School Classroom Building is located south of the original building and faces S. Elm Street. It is comprised of two sections, a one-story building facing S. Elm Street and a two-story addition at east. The classroom building has a flat roof and brick veneer. The west elevation is four bays wide. The north bay has a half-lite steel door with 4-lite transom above. The second bay has a wide steel door with 2-lite sidelights and 8-lite transom. A metal canopy extends over the sidewalk. The third and fourth bay each have a pair of large one-over-two windows. The north elevation is comprised entirely of vertical 12-lite metal sash windows. A vented brick equipment room with flat roof is located approximately halfway down the elevation, which extends to the perpendicular gymnasium/auditorium addition. The south elevation has three bays of large one-over-two windows and a shed extension. The extension has two steel doors with transoms on the west elevation and ten one-over-one metal sash windows across the south elevation.

Concession stand

Contributing Building ca. 1957

Square, one-story, brick concession stand is located at the southwest corner of the parcel adjacent to the athletic field. The flat roof has a wide overhang. There are two wood doors at east elevation and fenestration at north elevation.

The one-story-with-basement, side-gabled brick veneer Ranch house has a stepped asphalt shingle roof. Gables have vinyl siding with louvered vents in peak. The walkout basement at the west elevation has a gabled porch with square section wood posts on concrete slab. The façade is three bays wide. The first bay, which is within the taller stepped section, has three typical one-over-one vinyl replacement windows. The middle bay contains the recessed porch with turned wood posts on brick and concrete deck. The bay has vinyl siding, a six-panel door, and trio of typical windows. The third bay has two typical windows. The east elevation has a single-bay garage with vinyl siding surround and original six-over-six wood sash windows. A shed ell, added 1988-1989, extends from the rear. A wide brick chimney rises through the roof between the second and third façade bays. Brick piers with lanterns flank the driveway from Old Salisbury Road.

First Baptist Church

First Baptist Church purchased 16 acres of property at the east end of Garfield Street in 1964. Architect Ray Troxell of Statesville was contracted to design the new church. The final service at the church's longtime location at southeast corner of Garfield Street and South Green Street was held on Sunday, March 5, 1967, and the first service at the new First Baptist Church at 464 Garfield Street was held the following Sunday.¹⁹⁸

First Baptist Church is located at the southwest corner of Garfield Street and Old Salisbury Road at the eastern boundary of the Garfield and Green Streets district. The Modernist church consists of the tall front-gabled sanctuary and a one-story, flat-roofed, L-shaped classroom building with basement level on its west side. The sanctuary has vertical colored glass with offset muntins in its façade. The eaves angle outward at the gable peaks and have exposed rafters. The simple steeple has a square base and spire with modernist spherical finial. A one-story symmetrical section along the full width of the façade is five bays wide and has corbelled brick at the centered entry. Flanking bays have brick pilasters with vertical five-lite windows on either side. The east elevation of the sanctuary is six bays wide with six-lite vertical windows with paneling below in all bays but the third bay, which has a solid door.

A breezeway enclosed with six-lite windows and two pairs of full-lite double doors with transom connects to the L-shaped classroom building. The classroom building is one-story-with-basement. Its façade is four bays wide delineated by brick pilasters with flanking vertical five-lite window at the ground level. The basement level has vertical three-lite windows, one in the second bay and two in the third bay. The west elevation is fourteen bays wide with pilasters between bays three and four and flanking the eleventh bay, which has a recessed entry with solid door and transom. The first seven bays also have fenestration at the basement. Most bays also features five-lite vertical windows with panels below except as noted. The first bay has a solid door at the basement, and the second bay has a window at basement. The third bay has a pair of solid doors with transom at the basement and two windows above. The four consecutive bays at basement have windows with corrugated metal light wells. The south elevation of the classroom building is thirteen bays wide. Most bays have vertical five-lite windows over paneling. A full-depth recessed entrance to the sanctuary is located in the eleventh bay, and the sixth bay has paired steel doors with transom. An asphalt parking lot is located south of the church.

GREEN STREET, SOUTH

Louise Bigham and James A. Moton House

ca. 1957

Contributing Building

481 S. Green Street

In 1957 Louise Bigham Moton and James A. Moton built a brick house on the parcel next door to her mother Mary Belle Brown Bigham (515 South Green Street, no longer extant). Louise's father Gadson Bigham, Sr., co-founded Rutledge & Bigham Mortuary with St. Charles Rutledge, and after his death in 1934 her mother entered the business. After a teaching career, Louise took over the business in 1980 when her mother's health declined. Louise died in 2021, and the house remains in family ownership.¹⁹⁹

The Moton House is a one-story brick veneer ranch. Its side-gabled roof is sheathed in asphalt shingle. Typical windows are original two-over-two horizontal wood sash. The façade is four bays wide, with two typical windows with metal awnings in the north bays under a front-facing gable and vertical wood siding in the gable end. The shallow engaged porch comprises the third and fourth bays, which have a wood door with storm door and picture window. A metal awning extends from under the eave, and there are wrought iron posts and railing. A single-shoulder chimney flanked by narrow typical windows is on the south elevation. At a paired window bay, a flat-roofed carport with angled wood supports on a brick knee wall extends along the side elevation of a gabled bay off the rear. Beyond is a porch enclosed with windows.

Calvary Presbyterian Church

Contributing Building

531 S. Green Street

In 1968 the congregation of Calvary Presbyterian Church formed with merger of Broad Street United Presbyterian, Pleasant Grove United Presbyterian, and Race Street United Presbyterian. In 1969 they begin fundraising for a new building on adjacent to Billingsley Memorial Academy. Statesville architect Tom H. Hutchins designed the building, which a local newspaper described as, "more than 6,000 square feet, and includes seven classrooms for church school, a kitchen, choir room, pastor's study, library and storage areas," and the nave "stands 57 feet high on the front, descending to 18 feet in the rear."²⁰⁷ The building was completed in November 1972 and dedicated on June 24, 1973.²⁰⁸

Calvary Presbyterian Church is comprised of the prominent nave with square flat-roofed building at its east elevation and small flat-roofed ell at its west elevation. The paraboloid roof of the nave is oriented with its highest point toward the corner of S. Green Street and Newton Avenue. The façade faces north and is comprised of two angled faces coming to a point. It features pilasters flanking variegated stained glass over solid doors centered in each face. Side elevations also have vertical colored glass windows with a small operable pane at bottom, with three windows and a solid door on the west elevation and one window on the east elevation. The rear nave elevation, like the façade, has two angled faces. It has two three-lite colored glass windows on each face, and a brick chimney rises through the roof. The flat-roofed building east of the nave is five bays wide and three bays deep. Bays primarily have typical original three-lite metal windows. The north elevation has solid steel doors with storefront sidelights and transom in its fifth bay. The east elevation has a recessed entry with a flat metal canopy extending out. The small flat-roofed ell west of the nave has a small picture window on its north elevation. The south elevation is three bays wide with a solid door, a door with storm door, and picture window. Signage is located at the corner of S. Green Street and Newton Avenue, consisting of a brick base with piers supporting a metal bell.

The property was formerly the site of Billingsley Memorial Academy, a private school serving both Black and White students. The school was created from funds willed by Rev. Amos S. Billingsley (1818-1897) for the construction of a school for African Americans in Statesville. Rev. Billingsley and his wife Emily Hamilton Billingsley (1825-1908) were Presbyterian missionaries who settled in Statesville in 1871. Trustees of the Board of Missions of Freedmen of the Presbyterian Church U.S.A. purchased the property from the Tomlin family in 1901. The academy opened in 1906 and operated until closing early in the depression of the 1930s. Broad Street Presbyterian Church moved into the space in 1932. When three Presbyterian churches merged to form Calvary United Presbyterian Church in 1969, the former school served the congregation while a new church was built at the corner of South Green Street and Newton Avenue. Billingsley Memorial Academy was demolished after November 1972.²⁰⁹

VACANT LOT – Rev. Dr. Zander A. and Anna A. Dockery House, 546 S. Green Street

Former site of the home of Rev. Dr. Zander Adams Dockery and Anna Adams Dockery. The Dockerys came to Statesville from Charlotte in 1914 when he accepted the call as pastor of Second Presbyterian Church (later Broad Street Presbyterian Church). He also served as principal of Billingsley Academy until its closure in the 1930s. Rev. Dr. Dockery served as pastor until failing eyesight induced him to retire in 1954. He remained involved in civic, religious, and fraternal organizations in Statesville until his death at 103 in 1973. A one-story dwelling, which first appears on the 1925 Sanborn map, was built by carpenter and barber W. M. Simonton. He is first listed at that address in the 1922-1923 city directory. The property was foreclosed on in 1929 and purchased by the Dockerys, who had lived on the academy grounds, in 1930. The family still owns the property, though the house was demolished by 2002.

Morningside School Annex

1961

Contributing Building

611 S. Green Street

This parcel is the original site of Morningside School, opened in 1891 to serve the Black students of Statesville. A frame schoolhouse was destroyed by fire in 1916, and a two-story brick building was completed in 1921. A new high school building was constructed a block down Garfield Street in 1941, and the building continued to serve students up through the sixth grade. A detached six-classroom building addition was approved by the Statesville Board of Education at their July 1961 meeting, with the contract for construction awarded to G. L. Wilson Building Company. A smaller frame building was demolished on the site, and the annex was in use by November 1961. After the integration of Statesville schools in 1969, Morningside School closed. The facility hosted two daycare centers until 1972, when Peterson and Mangum Funeral Home, then operated by Oakwood Junior High assistant principal Lonnie P. Davis, Sr., purchased the annex. The company relocated their facilities from 206 Garfield Street. They demolished the brick school building and constructed a parking lot in its place. Local lore holds that burial plots for paupers are located behind the building. In 2006 a commemorative marker and plaque was placed on the site of the former Morningside School.²¹³

Green Street Cemetery—also mentioned in records as “the colored cemetery,” Union Grove Cemetery, and Greenwood Cemetery—was established as the first cemetery in Statesville for African Americans. In 1885 the Colored Peoples Graveyard Association purchased one-half acre from Mary C. Bell. Burials began in 1886, and two years later the cemetery added three acres with financial assistance from the City of Statesville. Green Street Cemetery was the final resting place for Statesville’s Black community until 1943, when the city opened Belmont Cemetery as the latter site was reaching capacity. The last documented burial in Green Street Cemetery was in 1949. The City took over maintenance of the property in 1961.²¹⁷

Green Street Cemetery sits on 3.38 acres on land and is surrounded by Green and Elm streets and rear property lines along Chambers Street. The property has gently rolling topography sloping from the southwest to the northeast. Mature trees are scattered in the middle of the cemetery but primarily line the southern and western edges. A brick pillar with engraved vertical granite "Green St" signage is located at the northwest corner. There is no fence around the cemetery, and it is open and grassy with the few extant headstones scattered throughout.

The Murphy-Hamilton House is named for two generations of a family who built and lived in the house for nearly half a century. In June 1929 barber John Peltier Murphy was issued a building permit for a "one-story residence on Green street between Sharpe and Garfield, to cost $3,300."²¹⁹ He lived in the house with wife Julia Emma Murdock Murphy. After their respective deaths in 1937 and 1942, their daughter Lillian Beatrice Murphy Hamilton resided in the house with her husband Paul. Lillian was educated at Scotia Seminary, Livingstone College, and Johnson C. Smith University. She taught in Statesville schools for forty-six years, retiring in 1957. The Hamiltons were members of Calvary United Presbyterian Church.²²⁰

This one-story, front-gable brick veneer house has Craftsman-style detailing. It has vinyl siding and a window with an awning in the gable. A soldier row is placed at the floor level. The shed porch was enclosed with brick veneer after 1950 according to Sanborn maps. The porch has six-over-six vinyl windows and a scalloped metal awning over the entry door. Side elevations have four-over-one wood sash windows with vertical muntins. The addition at rear continues the roof line and has basement access and a window on the north elevation. The south elevation has a brick chimney through the eave and gable bay with eave brackets. Eaves have exposed rafters. A porch with square section wood post is visible at the south rear.

In November 1935 the local newspaper reported that Frank A. Toliver, principal of Morningside School, "has recently completed a bungalow on South Green street and he and his family are now occupying their new home."²²¹ Frank was a native of Atlanta and earned a bachelor's degree from Atlanta University, master's degree from the University of Michigan, and doctorate from Columbia University. He married Anne Peace, a teacher and Greensboro native, in 1929. Annie was also highly degreed, having attained a master's degree in literature from Pennsylvania State University and her doctorate from Columbia. Both taught at Morningside, where Frank became principal in 1935. He held this position until 1941, when he took a similar position in Asheville.²²² The Tolivers rented the house to Alan Douglas (A. D.) Rutherford, Toliver's successor at Morningside, who purchased the property in 1959. A. D. was a native of Oregon who Rutherford was educated at Pacific College in Oregon, the University of California, and Columbia University. He settled in Statesville in 1936 where he taught English and Chorus at Morningside and, in 1943, received a master's in education from Temple University in Philadelphia. A. D. served as principal of Morningside until 1969, when he was promoted to assistant superintendent. Morningside was renamed in his honor in 1971. He retired in 1972, selling the property and moving to Raleigh.²²³

This one-story, hipped-roof Period Cottage has an original brick veneer. The façade is four bays wide. A corner porch at the south end of the façade has an arched opening has and a concrete floor and steps. The second bay has a clipped gable and double ten-lite vinyl window with original 4-lite wood window in gable. The façade chimney extends through the roof and has decorative brickwork. The third bay has a brick stoop to a four-panel replacement door with fanlight and a pair of six-over-six vinyl windows comprise the fourth bay. A row of brick headers are placed at the floor level. The eaves feature exposed rafters. All windows appear to be replacements. A door and corner porch is infilled with brick and an inset alcove detail.

In 1919 John P. Murphy deeded the property at 628 S. Green Street to daughter Julia Murphy Sherrill. No listing for the property appears in city directories until 1925-1926, with Julia as the occupant.²²⁴ The house may have been built by January 1924, when Lillian Murphy married Paul Hamilton "at the home of the bride's sister, Julia Sherrill, on South Green street."²²⁵ Julia married Ivey Sherrill, who died in 1917, and William C. Chatman, who died in 1949. Charles and Alma Carter Foushee, principal and teacher at Morningside School, were tenants in 1932-1933. Julia moved to Asheville by 1935 and Richmond, Virginia, by 1940. She sold the property to Herman Horne and Thellena Dalton Horne, who resided next door, in 1967. Julia died in Richmond in 1996 at age 107.²²⁶

The Sherrill Chatman House has an interesting application of Craftsman details on an I-house form. The two-story, frame house has a parged foundation and has side-gabled, asphalt-shingled roof with eave brackets. Wood weatherboard siding appears original. Six-over-one Craftsman wood sash windows have off-center horizontal muntins. The front gabled porch is full width with angled pediment frieze and wood posts, battered at corners and square section in middle, on brick piers, and concrete porch on stuccoed brick foundation. The low centered dormer is gabled with horizontal four-lite wood sash window. A full-width gabled rear ell has a smaller ell at its north corner with stuccoed chimney. Two small prefabricated shed are visible in the back yard.

The Burton-Horne House was likely built by Ashley Aaron Burton, Sr. after 1913, when he purchased the "Sally Dean lot" from J. A. Albea.²²⁷ Ashley and wife Mary Ann Carson Burton appear at the location, then addressed 129 Green Street, in the 1916-1917 city directory. Ashley worked as a janitor at Commercial National Bank for fifteen years. He also operated an eating house on S. Center Street in the Foushee Building, which was destroyed by fire in 1923. Ashley died in 1929, and by 1931 his widow was in danger of losing their home. Local undertaker St. Charles Rutledge purchased the property at tax sale, and Mary Ann remained in their home until her death in 1936.²²⁸

Herman L. Horne and Thellena Dalton Horne, teachers at Morningside High School, purchased the property in 1949. Herman was a native of Asheville who graduated from Tennessee State University and received a master's degree from Columbia University. He came to Morningside in 1945 as a coach and teacher. During his tenure at Morningside, his teams won four state championships in basketball and three district titles in football. Thellena was an alumna of Morningside who grew up in the Rankintown community. She earned a bachelor's degree from Winston-Salem State University and a master's degree from North Carolina A&T University. She taught for over thirty years, retiring from N. B. Mills Elementary in 1981. Herman died in 1995, and Thellena passed in 2016.²²⁹

The one-and-one-half-story side-gabled house is sheathed in a combination of aluminum siding and stone veneer. The north end of the facade has a simulated stone water table on a projecting portion. The engaged front porch has concrete masonry unit foundation with concrete floor with wrought iron supports and railing. The entry door is a replacement wood six-panel door with storm door. The façade has a centered shed dormer with wood shingle siding and pair of one-over-one aluminum windows. A shed carport addition, made in 1956 to the north elevation, has been enclosed with wood composite paneling and has a doorway. At the south elevation is a wood pergola. The chimney appears to have been sheathed with narrow midcentury stone. Windows are a mix of four-over-one wood sash covered with storm windows and one-over-one vinyl replacement. The roof is asphalt shingle.

Wilmer N. and Edith M. Derr were granted a building permit in May 1954 for a "five-room brick-veneer residence" at 636 S. Green Street.²³⁰ The Derrs were career educators, with Edith teaching in Taylorsville and Wilmer in Newton at the time they built the house. Edith started at Morningside School in 1955, moving to Race Street School in 1958 and N. B. Mills Elementary School in 1968 from where she retired in 1981. Wilmer began teaching at Morningside High School in 1960. After integration, he moved to Statesville Senior High School where he taught sociology, economics, and Black history until retiring in 1982. Both were members of Scotts Chapel United Methodist Church, and Wilmer was also civically active. He was appointed by the governor to the board of trustees of the North Carolina Teachers' and State Employees' Retirement System in 1971, and in 1974 he began service on the Statesville Civil Service Board. Wilmer died in 1984, and Edith passed away in 2023.²³¹

This one-story, side-gabled, brick veneer ranch house has Colonial Revival-style detailing including eave returns and wide frieze. The façade is three bays wide with a gabled bay with typical six-over-six wood sash window and nine-lite oculus in gable. An uncovered concrete porch on brick foundation with wrought iron railing spans two bays, which has the entry with shed hood and pair of typical windows. The six-lite two-panel wood door has an aluminum storm door. A chimney rises through the eave at the north elevation, which has flanking typical windows and a single window.

This two-story, side-gabled frame house has minimal detailing, but retains its I-house form. It is built on brick piers. The original wood weatherboard siding is visible in places but is primarily covered with asbestos shingle. The façade has a centered gable with vent and continuous eave. Original two-over-two wood sash windows are typical throughout. The shed porch has a beadboard frieze board and ceiling. Turned wood columns and scroll brackets sit on brick piers, and the porch deck is concrete. Eave soffits are sheathed in weatherboard. The façade is three bays wide, with typical windows flanking the half-lite wood front door. An aluminum storm door has integrated house numbers. The full-width gable ell at rear has a paired window opening in gable filled with plywood. A gabled ell in deteriorated condition is at its north corner, and a shed addition with jalousie window extends from its south corner.

Smith Byers and Mamie Byers are listed as residents in the 1909-1910 city directory, but by April 1910 they were recorded as living on Walker Street (today Harrison Street) in the U. S. Census. That house was likely gone by November 1915, when the local newspaper reported that Hilliard S. Byers, son of Gus and Dora, was building “a six-room bungalow on south Green street” to be “equipped with all modern conveniences.”²³⁸ Hillard and wife Mary C. Byers were listed at the address starting with the 1916-1917 city directory. Hilliard was a longtime employee of First National Bank as a janitor. He also partnered with neighbor Ashley Burton to operate Citizens Cash Grocery at 111 Garfield Street, and later was owner of Byers Drug Store. Hillard and Mary divorced in 1935, and he later remarried to Violet Feimster.²³⁹ The house was demolished in 1989 due to deterioration.

Hinton-Golden House
Contributing Building
662 S. Green Street

ca. 1909

While the house may be older, the earliest known resident of the property was Rev. Merritt H. Hinton, pastor of Scott's Chapel Methodist Church, as listed in the 1909-1910 Statesville city directory. The church was located across Chambers Street. Katie Golden purchased the house from Rev. John D. Cowan and his wife Leila Rankin Cowan in October 1919, eight months after the death of her husband Haywood Golden. The Goldenes operated a café on S. Center Street. Katie moved to Queens, New York in the 1930s with her daughters, during which time they rented the property. A notable renter was Peterson and Mangum Funeral Home, which opened here until moving to 206 Garfield Street in 1942. The house remained in the family until 1980.²⁴⁰

This one-story, hip-on-gable roof frame house has a parged foundation, vinyl siding, and a standing-seam metal roof. Windows are vinyl replacement, with six-over-six windows on the north elevation, west elevation, and façade and one-over-one windows on the south elevation. The L-shaped porch has a concrete block foundation, concrete floor, and wrought iron columns. A brick chimney rises through the center roof ridge. A ca. 1955 aerial photograph shows the form of the house resembles its modern appearance.²⁴¹ A prefabricated wood shed is located at the northwest corner of the parcel.

Noncontributing Building

610 Harrison Street

The house at 147 Walker Street, later renumbered as 610 Harrison Street, first appeared on the 1918 Sanborn map. The first known residents are Charlie Freeman and Josephine Gray Freeman, who purchased the property in 1920. Charlie operated a pressing club and café before his death under suspicious circumstances in December 1924. Josephine married Arthur Rhyne in 1925, and the following year they sold the house to George and Myrtle Smyre.²⁴³

This one-story, side-gabled house was built on brick piers with concrete masonry unit infill. The weatherboard siding was recently covered with vinyl siding. It has a standing-seam metal roof with a visible patch at the ridge from the removal of a brick chimney. The shed porch has turned wood posts and railing, and concrete steps at the south side lead to the concrete porch deck on brick foundation. A ca. 2023 full-width shed addition at rear extends to continue roof line.

VACANT LOT – Sharpe G. and Letha Gray House, 611 Harrison Street

Concrete steps at the sidewalk are the only remaining features of the Sharpe G. and Letha Tate Gray House, which was demolished by the city in 2007. Sharpe was a well-known barber. The property was purchased by daughter Ruth Gray Renwick and husband Chavis in 1949.²⁴⁴

Meacham-Rankin House

Noncontributing Building

615 Harrison Street

Livie Carl Meacham, masonry instructor at Morningside High School, purchased the lot in June 1950 and was a building permit for "a five-room cinderblock dwelling on Walker street" a few days later.²⁴⁵ As Meacham resided in Forest City and commuted to Statesville, he rented the house. It first appeared in the 1952-1953 city directory as the residence of teacher John Blackburn and Albertus S. Young, employed by North Carolina Furniture Company, and Grace B. Young.²⁴⁶ Meacham sold the property in 1957 to Lola Mae Rankin, who resided in the home until her death in 1998.

This one-and-one-half-story, side-gabled roof Period Cottage is clad with painted brick veneer and has an asphalt shingle roof. Decorative brickwork includes stepped brick around the entry and soldier rows at the floor level and window lintels in the gabled façade bay. According to property records, the house underwent renovation between 2018 and 2022. The façade is three bays wide, with the first bay having a typical one-over-one replacement vinyl window. The middle bay consists of the entry, which has a tiled stoop and steps with ledge. The gable roof has vinyl siding and is supported by Doric columns. Stepped brick surrounds the new leaded glass/panel door. The third bay features a single shoulder chimney bay through the gable eave. Typical windows flank the chimney. A gabled dormer with two one-over-one vinyl windows replaced the original shed roof dormer. At the rear is a full width shed porch. The brick retaining wall and ledge at concrete steps at sidewalk were added after 2023.

Chavis Renwick, a bellman at the Vance Hotel who also invested in real estate, was issued a building permit in December 1926 for a "one-story dwelling on Walker street, estimated cost $1600."²⁴⁸ Among the renters were J. W. Gunn (1928-1929), Oscar and Soma Young (1932-1933), Tomacher Davis (1942-1947), Arthur Williams (1948-1949), and Millard Floyd (1954-1955). He made updates to the property in 1957, receiving a permit for "celotexing and sheetrocking one family dwelling."²⁴⁹ Renwick died in 1973, and the family sold the property in 1988.

The one-story, Craftsman-style Renwick Rental House has a clipped gable asphalt shingle roof and is built on brick piers with concrete masonry unit infill. It is sheathed in vinyl siding, and the eave brackets are wrapped in vinyl. The hipped porch has wood decking on concrete masonry unit foundation and battered wood posts on brick piers. The windows are one-over-one vinyl replacement. A prefabricated shed is east of the house.

VACANT LOT – H. Crawford and Emma M. Cowan House, 628 Harrison Street

Emma Cowan purchased the property in 1901 but died in 1907. Husband Henry Crawford Cowan is listed as resident at 131 Walker Street in the 1907-1908 city directory. The dwelling is shown as a one-story house with wrap around porch on the 1918 Sanborn map. Crawford remarried to Maggie Phifer in 1912, and he died in 1930. Daughter Lula Cowan Shields inherited the property which she sold in 1967. It was demolished by 1983, when it no longer appeared in aerial imagery.²⁵⁰

VACANT LOT – John A. and Sallie Adams Sherrill House, 631 Harrison Street

John Andrew Sherrill, a brick mason, and Sallie Adams Sherrill purchased the parcel in 1897. He died in 1929, and Sallie resided in the home until she passed in 1953. The two-story hipped house was damaged by fire and demolished between June 2022 and October 2023.²⁵¹

Rev. J. L. and Mozella H. Hollowell House ca. 1914
Contributing Building
638 Harrison Street

Rev. James Leslie Hollowell, Sr. was born on April 11, 1881, in Goldsboro to Samuel Hollowell and Hepsie Jane Hicks Hollowell. He attended Winston-Salem Teachers College followed by Johnson C. Smith University (then Biddle University), earning a bachelor's degree in 1903 and master's degree in 1910. He began ministry in Statesville at Tradd Street Presbyterian Church, where he was pastor from 1906 until 1929, as well as Mt. Tabor Presbyterian Church in rural Iredell County. Rev. Hollowell married Elizabeth Beatty in 1909, and he purchased two lots in Statesville on Walker Street. The house was built by 1914 when the Hollowells appear in the Statesville city directory. Elizabeth died of complications from epilepsy in 1921; Rev. Hollowell remarried in 1923 to Mozella Hill. He resigned his pastorate in June 1929 to accept the presidency of Harbison Agricultural College in Irmo, South Carolina, but suddenly died four months later of cerebral hemorrhage. Mozella taught for thirty years at Morningside School and retired in 1955. She owned the house until 1963.²⁵²

The Hollowell House is a two-story house built on a brick foundation. It is sheathed in asbestos shingles with an asphalt shingle hipped roof. Its primary mass is relatively square in footprint. Windows appear to largely be vinyl replacement one-over-one sash, though there are some variations. The façade is asymmetrical, with two windows flanking the off-center front door at the street level. The windows upstairs are narrower, with two windows aligning with their counterparts below and a third window located in the middle slightly off-center. A two-story hipped ell extends from the south elevation, and the full-width hipped porch wraps around in an L-shape with screening on the south portion. The porch has a concrete deck on brick foundation, wrought iron supports along the façade, and 2x4 framing in the screened section. Concrete steps with knee wall and brick caps lead from the sidewalk to the porch. The front door is six panel wood with a wrought iron door storm door. The primary mass under the porch is sheathed in vinyl siding.

642 Harrison Street

Formerly the Dunnigan-Martin House, demolished by 1993. A one-story frame house first appeared on the 1918 Sanborn map, and Lee Dunnigan and Laura Mayberry Redding Dunnigan were listed as residing at the location in the 1909-1910 city directory. Lee died in 1911, and Laura passed in 1924. Her son James Thomas "Tom" Redding of Wilkesboro purchased the property from his brother Ransom Redding in 1930. Tom rented the house until selling it to longtime tenants Clyde W. Martin and Loretta Connor Martin in 1942. They resided in the home until Clyde's death in 1967, and Loretta moved to New York to live with her daughter.²⁵⁵

The one-story front-gabled house has an asphalt shingle roof and is sheathed in wood composite siding. It is built on a concrete foundation which steps down from the street following the parcel slope from east to west. The façade of the house is two bays wide with a pair of typical one-over-one vinyl windows in the first bay. The second bay is comprised of a gabled porch with board-and-batten wood composite siding in the gable. It has a brick foundation and steps with concrete floor and square section wood posts and railing. Under the porch are a two-panel door with leaded glass lite and typical window.

The Sherrill House was likely built by Lillian Sherrill Feimster and her husband Melvin for her mother Julia Clark Sherrill. Julia was born enslaved and the widow of Rev. John Sherrill, a founder of First Baptist Church. She recounted her enslavement in an interview with the local newspaper in 1944, which noted that Aunt Julie “lives in her own house, by her daughter, Lillian Feimster,” and with granddaughter Carrie Bell Byers.²⁵⁷

The Sherrill House is a one-story, front-gabled house with asphalt shingle roof and vinyl siding. It is built on stuccoed brick piers with concrete masonry unit infill. The full-width shed porch is approached by concrete stairs with knee wall and has a wood deck and square-section square posts and railing. The site slopes from the rear of the parcel down to the street. All windows have been replaced with one-over-one vinyl, and the front door is a new six panel door with storm door.

Osborne-Smoot House

646 Harrison Street

ca. 1916

Mamie Redding Osborne purchased from her mother Laura Redding Dunnigan the adjacent parcel to her on Walker Street in 1915. The house was completed by 1918, as it appears on the Sanborn map. Mamie and husband Max Osborne are listed in the 1920 U. S. Census, with Mamie working as a teacher and Max as a mechanic in a garage. They sold the property to A. B. and Emma Smoot in 1924 and moved to Garfield Street.²⁵⁸ Rev. Anderson Ballard Smoot was a native of Rowan County and served numerous Baptist congregations as a missionary pastor. He married Emma Caldwell in 1900 and settled in Statesville. He died in 1937 of pneumonia and was buried in Green Street Cemetery. Emma died two years later. Their daughter Mabel Smoot Brent inherited the property and resided there until her death in 1983.²⁵⁹

The Osborne-Smoot House is a one-and-a-half-story, side-gabled Craftsman house constructed on brick foundation and sheathed in vinyl siding. The full width shed porch has plywood decking on a brick foundation, square section posts on brick piers, and wood railing. A screened bay is located at the north end. The façade under the porch has a pair of large windows flanking the wood entry door. The shed dormer has two narrow one-over-one wood sash windows with wide flanking trim. A stuccoed brick chimney rises through the ridge. The south elevation has one-over-one wood sash windows with wide trim at the main level and a four-over-four wood sash window with wide trim in the gable. The primary mass of the house is three bays wide at the north elevation. The first bay is comprised of the enclosed portion of the façade porch, which has a horizontal screened section in the wall. The second bay has a window, and the third bay projects out with a window and hipped roof. A gabled wing with a single window on the façade and paired windows on the north face extends to the rear at this bay. The parcel slopes gradually from the street, allowing for basement access at the rear.

J. Luther and Carrie Bell Spann House ca. 1910, 1928
Contributing Building
650 Harrison Street

James Luther Spann and Carrie Bell Sales Spann purchased the house in 1913 from L. C. and Mary Wagner; the deed was not filed until 1929, and it is possible that the Spanns rented the property until they had paid it off. Luther worked as the custodian and caretaker of Center Street (later Mt. Pleasant) AME Zion Church. In 1928 the Spanns received a building permit to "repair and remodel his two-story residence on Walker street, to cost $1350."²⁶⁰ Luther and Carrie died in early 1938 within six weeks of each other. The house passed to daughter Zera Belle Spann, a 1919 graduate of Morningside High School who trained as a nurse at Lincoln Hospital in Durham. She was a leader of the Billingsley Memorial Hospital fundraising campaign in the 1940s. Zera worked for the Ausley and Allison families and the polio center in Hickory. She died in 1952 of kidney disease. The house remains owned by extended family.²⁶¹

The Spann House is a two-story house with a low hipped roof, Colonial Revival massing, and Craftsman detailing in the windows. It is built on brick piers with concrete masonry unit infill, which are visible at the rear as the site slopes steeply from the street level. It is likely that the four-over-one wood Craftsman windows date to the 1928 remodel. A ca. 1955 remodel added a carport with aluminum-sided gable and wrought iron supports on thick concrete slab to the north elevation. The full-width porch was replaced with a gabled porch with wrought iron supports on concrete slab.²⁶² The façade of the Spann House is symmetrical and is three bays wide. The center bay has the front entrance porch at street level, with replacement six panel door and storm door, and a shorter window above. The flanking bays have a window at each level. A metal stovepipe rises through the roof. The north and south elevations are the same, with two windows at each level. The windows at the street level are covered with plywood. A ruinous frame shed is at the west edge of the property.

LINCOLN STREET

Thomas L. and Lillie Mae W. Nichols House ca. 1940

111 Lincoln Street

Thomas Lee Nichols and Lillie Mae Weaver Nichols purchased lot 22 of the Flora Lewis property on Lincoln Street in 1940. Thomas was a cook at Hefner's Café on East Broad Street for about thirty years and died in 1967. Lillie was a member of the neighborhood Nicotiana Garden Club and Mt. Pleasant AME Zion Church. She died in 1987.²⁶³

This front-gabled house is built on brick piers with concrete masonry unit infill and sheathed in wood German weatherboard siding with an older asphalt shingle roof. All windows and fenestration are covered in plywood. The façade is two bays wide with a window in the first bay and engaged corner porch as the second bay. A louvered vent is in the gable, and the shallow eaves are boxed. The east elevation is three bays wide consisting of the corner porch and two bays with fenestration, between which is a square brick chimney through the eave. The west elevation has four bays of fenestration. A square brick chimney is visible at the west side of the rear elevation. A stovepipe is through the roof near the center ridge.

Gaston Gillespie and Susie Chaney Gillespie received a building permit for a "six-room frame residence on Lincoln street" in September 1949.²⁶⁴ Susie was a native of Florida who moved to Statesville in 1942. In 1956 she was granted a permit to extend the dining room of the house, likely to accommodate the residents of her rest home, which opened in July 1957. She constructed a Ranch house next door for a new facility ca. 1962, and Gillespie's Rest Home operated until she retired in 1982. Susie and Gaston divorced in 1960, and she remarried to James Freeman in 1965.²⁶⁵

The Gillespie Freeman House is a one-story side-gabled frame dwelling with a walkout basement. It is built on a concrete masonry unit foundation and sheathed in vinyl siding with an asphalt shingle roof. Typical windows are one-over-one vinyl replacement. The façade is three bays wide with the west two bay consisting of a low-slope shed porch with concrete floor and square section wood posts. In these two bays are a trio of windows--a picture window flanked by one-over-one windows--and a replacement six panel door. The third/east bay is gabled with a pair of windows. Two chimneys are visible at the façade, a small square chimney with tall metal smokestack approximately in the center and rectangular chimney at the west elevation breaking the eave. A gable ell with shed addition at rear, which was expanded in 1956, extends from the west elevation. It has a typical window and replacement door at the façade and pair of windows on the west face. A flat-roofed carport extends toward the street from the ell and has square section wood posts and wrought iron railing along the west side, which has a steep drop as the site slopes sharply from the street.

Since July 1957, Susie Chaney Gillespie operated a rest home for elderly Black persons in her house at 123 Lincoln Street. In January 1959 she successfully petitioned the Statesville Planning and Zoning Board for the adjacent property to be rezoned; she planned “to build a larger nursing home” on the site.²⁶⁶ The new facility was constructed by 1962 according to property records. Gillespie's Rest Home operated until Susie’s retirement in 1982.²⁶⁷

The one-story, side-gabled Ranch house is built on a crawlspace and has brick veneer and an asphalt shingle roof. Typical windows are two-over-two horizontal light wood sash. The façade is five bays wide with two typical windows comprising the northern two bays, a brick porch with wrought iron railing and shed hood extension over a replacement six panel door in the middle two bays, and a front-gabled bay with a picture window flanked by two-over-two horizontal light wood sash windows in the south bay. There is a louvered vent in the gable. A gabled carport with wrought iron railing extends off the south elevation, which has a brick chimney. Another brick chimney is through the roof at the west side. It was converted to a duplex ca. 2020.

522-524 S. Tradd Street

The multifamily units at 518-520 and 522-524 South Tradd Streets were built by ca. 1940 by G. H. and Estelle M. Huffman, White landlords who owned the property until 1975. 518-520 South Tradd Street was originally a quadraplex but is now a duplex.²⁷⁸

The duplex at 522-524 South Tradd Street is a two-story building with a concrete masonry unit ground level and frame upper level. It is sheathed in wood weatherboard siding, and the front-gabled roof is standing seamed metal with boxed eaves. The two-story gabled porch has vertical wood paneling in the gable. There are concrete masonry unit supports at the ground level and square section wood posts at the upper level. Wood stairs with railing and concrete masonry unit support at the landing lead to the wood plank porch deck. There are two brick chimneys rising through the roof ridge. The south elevation is three bays wide with paired fenestration openings covered with plywood in basement bays. The upper level has a typical one-over-one vinyl replacement window in the first bay and pairs of typical windows in the other bays. A wood deck with square section wood posts is located at the rear. The building was under repair at the time of survey in June 2024.

538 S. Tradd Street

This was formerly the site of Tradd Street Presbyterian Church. Tradd Street Presbyterian Church was formed in 1902 after members of Second Presbyterian Church (also known as Broad Street Presbyterian Church) broke to form a new church. The original trustees of the church were R. H. Alexander, P. W. Steele, S. G. Gray, and J. P. Murphy. Shortly afterwards, the church completed their new building on the namesake street. By 1907 they had raised funds to complete a new building at 538 South Tradd Street. According to the 1950 Sanborn map, the church featured a twenty-foot-high belfry at its southeast corner. Tradd Street Presbyterian Church merged into what became Calvary Presbyterian Church. The church was demolished by 1983 according to aerial imagery. The extant house was constructed by Habitat for Humanity in 2001.²⁸¹

This one-story, front-gabled frame house is built on a parged concrete masonry unit foundation and sheathed in vinyl siding with an asphalt shingle roof. The façade is three bays wide with a pair of typical one-over-one vinyl windows in the third bay. The first and second bays have a pair of typical windows and a paneled fanlight door with storm under the gabled porch. The porch has turned wood posts and railing and has a wood deck on parged masonry foundation. The south elevation is four bays wide, with two small typical windows flanking a nine-light door and a typical window. A wood deck with railings and steps is at rear. The north elevation is three bays wide with typical windows. A prefabricated storage shed is behind the house.

Statement of Significance Summary Paragraph (Provide a summary paragraph that includes level of significance, applicable criteria, justification for the period of significance, and any applicable criteria considerations.)

The Garfield and Green Streets Historic District in Iredell County, North Carolina meets the National Register of Historic Places Criterion A: Ethnic Heritage: Black and Social History at the local level as the hub of Statesville's African American community. This collection of resources, including historic churches, educational sites, businesses, residences, a park, and a cemetery, preserves the story of African American life in Statesville from when freedpeople settled the community in the Reconstruction Period through the civil rights movement and the early 1970s. The historical resources are a lens into the lives of educators, pastors, church members, professionals, businesspeople, working class people, and their families who shaped the past in this western piedmont city. Evolving as a center of African American culture and strength amidst the oppressive backdrop of racial segregation, the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District also holds local level significance under Criterion A: Civil Rights. The District was home to participants and leaders in the local civil rights movement, such as pastor Jordan C. Clifton and funeral home director T.V. Mangum, and several important sites in the local movement, including Morningside High School, the Morningside School Annex, and Garfield Park, exist in the present. The District has a period of significance that begins in 1886 when burials began at its oldest extant resource, Green Street Cemetery, and ends in 1973 when the most recent construction of the historical period, Calvary Presbyterian Church, was completed.

Center Street A.M.E. Zion Church (537 South Center Street), built in 1903, was individually listed in the National Register in 1980 for local significance under Criterion A in the areas of Ethnic Heritage: Black and Religion. The nomination for the church, however, did not provide context for significance in the area of Religion, and because no evidence is available to support this area of significance, the nomination for the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District does not claim Religion as an area of significance. The Center Street A.M.E. nomination also established local significance for the church under Criterion C: Architecture, but this Criterion does not apply to the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District as a whole. However, Architecture has been added as an area of significance on the form because of the inclusion of Center Street A.M.E. Zion Church within the district boundaries.²⁸³

African Americans in the Early History of Statesville, 1788–1865

African Americans have shaped the history of Iredell County and Statesville since the mid-eighteenth century when they were brought to this area between the Yadkin and Catawba rivers

as enslaved people who broke the land and cultivated the plantations and small farms of the area. In 1788 the North Carolina General Assembly established Iredell County from this growing section of what was then western Rowan County. Named for Revolutionary War hero James Iredell, the new county elected leadership and chose the geographic center of the county as its seat. A year later, Federal census takers counted 5,435 residents in Iredell County, 858 enslaved and three free Black people.²⁸⁴ By 1860 the county population had grown to 15,347, including 4,177 enslaved people and 29 free Black people.²⁸⁵

Through the late antebellum period, Statesville was, in the words of local historian Homer Keever, “not much of a town.” Aside from the courthouse, the town had several stores, taverns, blacksmiths, and carriage makers.²⁸⁶ When the nineteenth century began, the town had sold two dozen lots along several primary streets: Broad, Meeting, Center, Tradd, and Front.²⁸⁷ With no river transportation and intersected by rough country roads, the town slowly grew as a government and commercial center for the farms and plantations in the countryside.²⁸⁸ Change came with the completion of the Western North Carolina Railroad and the Atlantic, Tennessee, and Ohio Railroad through town in 1858. These lines provided connections to Asheville and Charlotte together with a promise of economic expansion.²⁸⁹

As the national crisis over enslavement evolved, white voters in North Carolina and Iredell County supported proslavery candidates who called for the state’s separation from the Union during the secession crisis of 1860–1861. As the nation plunged into war, Statesville’s economy crumbled. Union forces targeted stockpiled cotton and Confederate war supplies in the town. General George Stoneman led a cavalry raid against Statesville and destroyed the railroads. As the war closed in April 1865, the destructive days of conflict brought hope for enslaved people—the Emancipation Proclamation (1863), which abolished slavery in rebellious states. However, many enslaved people remained uncertain of their fate in the postwar political atmosphere.²⁹⁰

The Roots of Garfield and Green Streets Historic District, 1865–1900

African Americans began to settle in the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District after the Civil War, a time when political and social progress for freedpeople gave them hope for a better future. In the Reconstruction Period (1865–1877), African Americans in North Carolina and the South won significant gains with two constitutional amendments. The Fourteenth Amendment (ratified in 1868) granted citizenship and equal civil and legal right to the newly-freed people and the Fifteenth Amendment (ratified in 1870) gave African American males the right to vote. African American voters swelled the ranks of the Republican Party, electing nearly 200 Black men to serve as state representatives and senators, giving the party of Lincoln a majority.²⁹¹ This new leadership sought to expand economic, educational, and political rights for Black people across North Carolina. The General Assembly drafted a new state constitution in 1868 which granted universal male suffrage, established a system of tax-supported schools, and eliminated property qualifications for holding office.²⁹² These amendments empowered freedpeople in the Statesville and across the South, although forces worked to turn back this progress.

Statesville's depressed postwar economy gradually revived as railroad companies rebuilt lines, creating important linkages that allowed manufacturing to become ingrained in the local economy. Small factories producing tobacco products, spokes and handles, barrels, tobacco boxes, and furniture arose along the railroad tracks at the south end of the district through the 1870s, 1880s, and 1890s.²⁹³ The wage-paying jobs that factories offered, and also religious, educational, and cultural institutions, attracted rural Black and white farmers who wished to escape the challenges of sharecropping, tenant farming, and poverty. Statesville grew to 644 residents in 1870, of whom 223 were Black. Two decades later, there were 2,318 residents of whom approximately one third were Black. African Americans initially settled in the Depot Hill area along the railroad tracks near where Garfield Street meets South Center Street.²⁹⁴ There, land was available and inexpensive due to its proximity to factories and the railroad. African Americans also settled in several other communities scattered about Statesville, but of these, the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District, with its cemetery, churches, school, and other sites for African Americans, became the heart of Statesville's African American community.²⁹⁵

While African Americans created new lives and communities in Statesville, white supremacists consistently worked to weaken their political and social status. The Ku Klux Klan gained followers and violent white mobs committed acts of extralegal violence against Black people to instill fear.²⁹⁶ The pervasive racial injustice of the time was palpable in Statesville, as is illustrated the cases of Tom Dula, a white man accused of murdering Laura Foster in 1868, and Charles Campbell, a Black man accused of murdering John Redman in 1883. Dula was legally tried, determined guilty by jury, and hanged in 1868.²⁹⁷ Campbell had been arrested after he was involved in a drunken fight along South Center Street that led to the shooting death of his opponent. He was jailed, but faced a different outcome than Dula, as mob violence stole the opportunity of a trial. Convinced of Campbell's guilt, a crowd of angry men descended upon the jail and extracted Campbell. They took him to a tree outside the city limits near the Western Carolina Railroad and hanged him. Statesville's newspaper reported that "many of the colored people [of Statesville] were full of indignation" at what transpired. Some had the bravery to arrange a meeting with city leaders in which they denounced lynching. The force of white supremacy, however, blocked further inquiry into the lynching of Campbell, and mob violence only increased as the nineteenth century progressed.²⁹⁸

The oppressive atmosphere of Statesville did not deter African Americans from seeking a better life within the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District. Born enslaved on the Allison plantation outside of Statesville in 1853, Rev. Caesar Allison Sr. was one of the many freedpeople who built the foundation of the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District. Against the laws of the state, Allison learned to read while enslaved. As he came of age, he developed a reputation as a skilled preacher. He founded Davidsonville Negro Baptist Church outside of town in 1874.²⁹⁹ In 1889, Allison and his wife Cora bought a lot from Mary C. Bell at the corner of Garfield and Green Streets where they built a small frame house for their growing family.³⁰⁰ Caesar worked as an independent Baptist preacher in Statesville for the next 40 years, dying in his home in 1933. He was buried at Green Street Cemetery.³⁰¹ A son, Caesar Allison Jr. (1894–1925), followed his father's calling and was a well-known street evangelist of Statesville and Charlotte and as far away as New Orleans and Los Angeles.³⁰²

The Black churches of the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District were centers of spirituality, community, and influence in local history. The oldest congregation of the district is the Mount Pleasant A.M.E. Zion Church, also known as Center Street A.M.E. Zion (537 South Center Street). Reverend Sidney Smith Murdock (1825–1896), a freedman, blacksmith, and teacher in the Freedman's Bureau in Statesville, had attended a white Methodist Church throughout his life. In 1868, he led with other African American Methodists in the founding of Mount Pleasant on Center Street. Leading alongside Murdock was Alfred Bailey (1828–1902), a formerly enslaved person and fellow blacksmith. During its early years, the church was associated with the Methodist Episcopal Church (South) denomination. The original building on Center Street consisted of two wood-frame buildings. In time, the congregation would raise a more substantial brick structure symbolizing their importance to the community through the decades.³⁰³

In the midst of Reconstruction, African Americans in Statesville and the county found important allies in Amos and Emily Billingsley. Amos (1818–1897), a native Ohioan and veteran of the Union Army who had served in North Carolina during the war, was a trained Presbyterian minister of some renown who was inspired to help the freedpeople of the South. As missionaries with the Northern Presbyterian Church, the Billingsleys chose Statesville as their place of duty, settling in the city in 1869. Emily taught in a local Black school while Amos proselytized among the Black population. With their support, he established the Second Presbyterian Church in the 1870s at the present address of 222 East Broad Street.³⁰⁴ Billingsley was prominent in the Presbyterian Church in both Iredell County, where he established two other churches, and Charlotte, as he joined the founding of Biddle University where many future Black professionals of Statesville received their education. Second Presbyterian is the ancestral congregation of the later Broad Street Presbyterian Church, which met in the same building, and the later Calvary Presbyterian Church, formed in Garfield and Green Streets Historic District in the late 1960s.³⁰⁵

Billingsley's pastorate over a Black congregation was unusual in the post-Reconstruction South where Black and white people worshipped in their own churches. In an act that demonstrated, perhaps, a growing desire for autonomy and self-determination among Statesville's African American population, the congregation of Second Presbyterian Church ousted Billingsley in favor of a Black pastor, Rev. Samuel F. Wentz, in 1884. The Billingsleys nevertheless continued to support the local Black community. In his will, Amos left a sum of money for the establishment of a hospital that would serve both Black and white patients. In 1900, three years after he died, Billingsley Memorial Hospital opened. This privately-funded hospital served both races, albeit in segregated wards, until its closure during the Great Depression.³⁰⁶

Another bastion of strength that emerged in Statesville's Reconstruction-era African American community was the Baptist Church. Beneath a brush arbor on the corner of Jefferson and Rickert Streets in 1874, Reverend Charlie Brown and several other devout Christians met to discuss the foundation of a new church they called Emmaus Baptist Church. It is unclear where they held services until 1883, the year they purchased a lot from Mary C. Bell on the southeast corner of Garfield and Green Streets where they built a new church (306 Garfield, structure non-extant) that was their home into the 1960s. Under Rev. V.T. Nunally's tenure (1881–1890), Emmaus voted to change their name to First Baptist Church.³⁰⁷ The present First Baptist Church (464 Garfield Street) is the descendant of this original congregation.

Green Street Cemetery (South Elm Street)—the first cemetery in Statesville that was strictly for African Americans—was established in 1885.³⁰⁸ Black people, who were denied burial in public and white-owned cemeteries, are believed to have buried their dead in churchyards prior to this date when a group called the Colored Peoples Graveyard Association purchased half an acre of land from Mary C. Bell, the same woman who sold land to the organizers of the First Baptist Church. Burials began in 1886, and two years later, the cemetery expanded its grounds with the acquisition of three additional acres with some financial assistance from the City of Statesville.³⁰⁹ The cemetery, where more than 2,000 people are buried, serves as a vital record of the history of the Black experience in Statesville as it contains the graves of the community's formerly enslaved ancestors, their descendants, and other residents.

The Garfield and Green Streets Historic District's status as the historical center of Black education in Statesville and Iredell County dates to the late nineteenth century. A tract of land on the north side of Green Street Cemetery was the site of a "colored school house" by 1885 that may have been organized by the early residents of the vicinity.³¹⁰ Within several years, Statesville's civic leaders discussed plans to start a graded school system in the city. African Americans made certain their voices were heard when they held a meeting at the courthouse "in the interest of graded schools."³¹¹ In 1891 the City launched a graded school system, providing a white and a Black school. The latter school came to be known as the Colored Free School or Colored Graded School.³¹² This two-room, frame schoolhouse stood at present-day 611 South Green Street.³¹³ Upon this site, African Americans from the neighborhood and elsewhere in Iredell County received an education.

Across North Carolina and the South in the late nineteenth century, customary and legal discrimination against African Americans intensified, gradually eroding the constitutional rights they had won since Emancipation. In 1896 the Supreme Court's ruling in Plessy v. Ferguson established the "separate but equal" doctrine of racial segregation, legitimizing discriminatory practices and profoundly impacting the Black community in Statesville by entrenching systemic inequalities in education, public services, and economic opportunities. The Wilmington Massacre (1898), in which white supremacists violently overthrew the biracial local government through a campaign of intimidation against Black voters, added to the pressure against African American political participation across the state.³¹⁴ On the heels of the tragedy in Wilmington was the election of 1900 in which white Democrats campaigned on a platform of white supremacy that promised to eliminate the Black vote through the implementation of literacy tests and poll taxes. Waves of violence against Black peopleswept the state. The Statesville Mascot newspaper saw this election as “the great battle for white supremacy,” likening the African American right to vote “a millstone” that had been around the neck of white North Carolinians.³¹⁵ The Democratic victory restored white political dominance in North Carolina, further marginalizing Black people in Statesville through oppressive Jim Crow policies.

The new building for Center Street A.M.E. Zion Church, completed at 537 South Center Street in 1903, symbolized the strong sense of identity and community pride in the Statesville African American population as the new century opened. Built in an impressive Gothic Revival style, the brick building reflected the community’s cultural sophistication. Rev. W.A. Blackwell oversaw the laying of the cornerstone for the new structure which was built with funds from both the Black and white community. Church elders from Statesville and Charlotte, pastors from local churches, and Black and white citizens attended the ceremony.³¹⁶ This occasion also marked a transition from the Methodist Episcopal Church (South) to a denomination that was sweeping across the Carolinas and Virginia—the African Methodist Episcopal Zion (A.M.E.Z.) Church. Then known as Center Street A.M.E. Zion Church, it served as a place of worship, a center for education, and a meeting place for social justice initiatives.

Private education was available to Black students through Billingsley Memorial Academy, which operated from 1906 until the Great Depression. Following Amos Billingsley’s death, Rev. Samuel F. Wentz, the Black pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church (later known as Broad Street Presbyterian Church), petitioned Billingsley’s widow Emily to aid in establishing an academy in Statesville. In 1901 Emily donated $100 toward the acquisition of land and $1,000 for the development of what was initially called Billingsley Memorial Academy and Industrial School. The Board of Missions of Freedmen of the Presbyterian Church, a northern philanthropic organization, acquired (with their own and Emily’s funds) six acres along Green Street from Mrs. M.A. Tomlin for the school site.³¹⁷ The site of the Academy was in the District on the northeast corner of Dockery and South Green Streets directly south of present-day Calvary

Presbyterian Church.³¹⁸ For the next several years, Wentz led fundraising efforts to which local African Americans heavily contributed, and by 1903, the building campaign had plans for a three story brick structure.³¹⁹

Statesville African Americans, joined by Mayor J.C. Steele, celebrated the groundbreaking for Billingsley Memorial Academy in 1905, the Academy reached completion the following year.³²⁰ At a biracial meeting of Statesville's ministers the same year, Wentz appealed to white ministers to aid in the "material and moral uplift of the colored men" of Statesville by supporting the development of the industrial, normal, and common school curriculum of the academy. He asked, "in the consideration of our future, judge us not so much by the dizzy heights yet to be attained and things yet to be accomplished, but more by the distance we have come and the things already accomplished by us."³²¹ Wentz served as Principal of the Academy and pastor at Second Presbyterian until 1914 when he relocated to a pastorate in Winston-Salem.³²²

A birdseye illustration of Statesville from 1907 provides a general depiction of the prominent landmarks, roads, and railroads of the city, including those of the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District.³²³ The illustration shows Center Street A.M.E. Zion Church on South Center Street, Scott's Chapel Methodist Church on Chambers Street, First Baptist Church on Green Street, Billingsley Memorial Academy on South Green Street, and many small residences. An open block between Garfield and Chambers represents the site of Green Street Cemetery, in use for over two decades by this time. Missing from the birdseye view was the Colored Free School which dated to 1891; however, the school was a symbol of pride to the residents of the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District. In May 1910, the local newspaper announced that the school wrapped up "the most successful [year] in its history with an enrollment of 210. The figure was impressive given that there were 254 Black children of school age in the City."³²⁴

The people who settled in the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District in this period reflected the working class roots of the community: factory workers, general laborers, and domestics. Yet, there was a growing segment of Black professionals such as pastors, teachers, undertakers, and physicians. One of the new arrivals—Zander Adams Dockery (1870–1973)—became a respected figure in the community as a teacher, preacher, and leader in the struggle for racial equality. A native of Richmond County, Dockery received undergraduate (1899), divinity (1902), and doctorate of divinity (1919) degrees from Biddle University. After working in Charlotte, he took the position as pastor of Second Presbyterian Church in Statesville in 1914, simultaneously serving as principal of Billingsley Academy into the 1930s. During the 1910s, Billingsley featured a normal school, twelve grade levels, and industrial training and grew to include a grass tennis court, three basketball courts, a 1,200 volume library, and affiliations with Johnson C. Smith and other Black colleges.³²⁵ There were some 200 pupils in 1915 when Dockery wrote an editorial for the local newspaper, stating that the school's motto was "thorough work" and asked members of both races in the city to contribute to much needed repairs at Billingsley.³²⁶ Dockery, who served as pastor until failing eyesight induced him to retire in 1954, remained involved in civic, religious, and fraternal organizations in Statesville until his death at 103 in 1973. Dockery Street, located between South Green Street and South Elm Street, was named in his honor.³²⁷

The number of churches of the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District expanded in this period as the neighborhood's population increased. The First Baptist Church on the southeast corner of Garfield and Green Streets built a new brick church in 1905 and later enlarged the building.³²⁸ Tradd Street Presbyterian Church was formed in 1902 after members of Second Presbyterian Church (later known as Broad Street Presbyterian Church) broke to form a new congregation. The original trustees of Tradd Street were R.H. Alexander, P.W. Steele, S.G. Gray, and J.P. Murphy.³²⁹ Shortly afterwards, the church completed their new building on Tradd, but by 1907, they raised funds to relocate from this site to a new structure down the street.³³⁰ Another new church of the period was Scott's Chapel United Methodist Church. Established in the Belmont neighborhood in the 1880s as Love Methodist Episcopal Church, the congregation purchased a lot on Chambers Street on the south side of Green Street Cemetery. They built their new spiritual home in 1905, renaming themselves Scott's Chapel to honor a church elder. This original site (307 Chambers Street) now serves as a parking lot for the most recent church building at 316 Chambers Street.

Educators, like pastors, were highly regarded in the community. Charles Webster Foushee (1873–1935) served as principal of the Colored Graded School in the district from about 1906 until his death in 1935. Raised on a farm in Moore County, he attended Dayton Academy, a private school for Black students. Charles trained as a teacher at Livingstone College in Salisbury, beginning his work in Lee County before transferring to Statesville about 1906. Under his leadership, the teaching staff at the school expanded from three teachers to sixteen.³³¹ One of the teachers when Charles arrived was Alma Carter whom he married in 1919, the same year he completed postgraduate studies at Columbia University.³³² In his time, Charles also served as Chairman of the Board of Trustees of the Center Street A.M.E. Zion Church, Sunday School Chairman, Chairman of the Boy Scout committee, deputy in the Knights of Pythias, and superintendent of the North Carolina Mutual and Provident Association.³³³ In this period the Foushees rented at 315 Garfield Street and, by 1930, moved into 628 South Green Street.³³⁴

Mary Charlton Holliday was another educator who left a remarkable legacy in the city and the county. Born in Pulaski, Virginia to a railroad brakeman and educated at Hampton, she settled in Statesville in 1915 when there were approximately 40 Black schoolhouses across rural Iredell. The schools often were held in shacks and lacked books and other resources. Working with the Jeanes Foundation and the Rosenwald Foundation, Holliday supervised the small schools, some of which only were reachable by horseback. She helped smaller communities consolidate their educational efforts and build 11 new schoolhouses over the next four decades. She was employed in the county school system until 1956.³³⁵ Mary lived at 241 Garfield Street with her husband, prominent local doctor Robert S. Holliday, whom she married in 1915.

By 1916 there were 280 African Americans students from Statesville and nearby rural communities in attendance at the Colored Graded School. That year, disaster struck the morning of March 9. As students were making their way into their classrooms, a fire broke out in a stove flue of the building. Principal Foushee calmly led students outside the school as firefighters raced to extinguish the flames which also threatened neighboring First Baptist Church. After the hydrant closest to the school failed, firemen ran a hose all the way from South Center Street, but the school was destroyed. Students were heartbroken. "Many of them were greatly affected by the fire and they could be heard crying from some distance," the newspaper reported.³³⁶ The loss of the school was a tragedy as it would take years to build another standalone school building. Until then, the community held classes in the basement of Center Street A.M.E. Zion Church and elsewhere in the neighborhood while school children began collecting pennies for a new school.³³⁷

With funds raised from the community and the local school board, a new school was completed in 1922 for $45,000. The two-story building accommodated 300 students and featured a library and a 500-person auditorium. The building stood in the same location as the previous school (611 South Green Street). Principal Foushee named the new school Morningside. What resulted was the "finest graded school building for colored children in North Carolina and one of the Black-owned businesses, such as barber shops, tailors, and small grocery stores, provided goods and services to residents of the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. A notable business that opened in the 1920s was a Black funeral home—Rutledge & Bigham—that continues to serve the community in the present at 603 South Center Street. During the Jim Crow era in Statesville and elsewhere in the South, Black funeral home directors and owners served as vital community leaders, preserving cultural traditions while creating economic opportunities for Black entrepreneurs. The partners relocated to Statesville from Washington DC to open their business in 1922 at 109 Garfield Street (non-extant).³³⁹

The Great Depression and World War II, 1929–1945

The collapse of the national economy in 1929 came at a time when many African Americans in Statesville already were struggling to make ends meet. The Great Depression (1929–1941) exacerbated the issues they faced, from unemployment to discrimination. President Franklin Roosevelt’s New Deal promised assistance in part through the creation of jobs, although work relief agencies like the Public Works Administration (later known as the Works Progress Administration) and the Civilian Conservation Corps put projects in control of local offices that often discriminated against Black people. Later, relief agencies became more attentive to the needs of Black workers. World War II (1941–1945) alleviated unemployment and inspired many Black people to join the armed forces or leave Statesville to search for factory work in Northern cities. The people who stayed in the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District fought with varying success to keep their churches, schools, and businesses open in the face of new challenges and worked together to fight discrimination.³⁴⁰

During the trying times of the Depression, the religious institutions of the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District, united to uplift many African Americans in Statesville. Sponsored for years by the Presbyterian Church, Billingsley Memorial Academy closed in this period; nevertheless, the tract on which it stood became a place of renewal. The Presbyterians maintained ownership of the tract, located directly south of the current Calvary Presbyterian Church (531 South Green Street), and made it the new home of Broad Street Presbyterian Church in 1932.³⁴¹ With economic hardships mounting, Center Street A.M.E. Zion Church faced foreclosure but ultimately pulled together resources to save their building.³⁴²

Business owners in the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District also suffered as residents put their earnings towards basic essentials. Some establishments, however, managed to keep their doors open. Built in 1925, 609-611 South Center Street (The Holliday Building) has housed many businesses throughout history. During the Depression, Archibald Boyd operated a barber shop in the building and, through the 1960s, the Littlejohn family barbered there. Adjoining this address under the same roof was a space that served as the following: a dentist (B.J. Abernathy, c.1930–c.1940), a drug store (H.S. Byars 1931), a hairdresser (Golar Bradshaw 1930; Mabel Moseley, 1940), physician (H.A. Hogan, 1930; Floyd C. Carden 1940), a tailor Howard A. Houston (1940).³⁴³

A new Black funeral home opened in the district in 1934 when Arthur Torrence Peterson (1888–1966) moved from Salisbury to Statesville to serve the local community. He joined Travis Van Mangum two years later.³⁴⁴ Mangum, in his years in Statesville, would become one of the most important Black leaders in the city's history. Born in Granville County, he attended the University of Cincinnati and the Cincinnati College of Embalming before settling in Statesville to start his business.³⁴⁵ The first location of Peterson & Mangum was 662 South Green Street. In 1942, the business relocated to Mangum's large home at 206 Garfield Street. Mayor Wesley Jones spoke at the occasion of the reopening.³⁴⁶ Peterson resided in a non-extant home (vacant lot - 202 Garfield Street) next door to the Garfield Street funeral home.³⁴⁷

There were several Black physicians in local history. Among the most well-known was Dr. Robert S. Holliday (1875–1966) who lived for many years at 241 Garfield Street with his wife, educator Mary Charlton Holliday. Holliday was educated at Shaw University and received his medical degree at Lincoln University in Pennsylvania. He began practicing in Statesville in the 1910s and continued into the early 1960s.³⁴⁸

Beginning in the 1920s and through the early 1940s, two women—Jane Abernathy Conner (1871–1941) and Daisy M. Conner Robinson (1892–1947)—provided essential nursing care to African Americans from their home at 249 Garfield Street (original residence non-extant).³⁴⁹

The address, which appeared in censuses and city directories as a “private hospital” and as the “Colored Branch [of] Davis Hospital,” served as an overnight hospital ward for African Americans in Statesville who were prohibited from staying overnight at the city’s segregated Davis Hospital, a facility that opened in 1920. If an African American patient required care beyond a day, they were sent to the Garfield Street address for additional support.³⁵⁰ By 1921 Jane was nursing patients in the home, including patients with injuries as serious as bullet wounds and amputations.³⁵¹ Her daughter, Daisy, followed in Jane’s footsteps as a dedicated African American nurse.³⁵²

The Conners’ professional dedication in addressing healthcare disparities, along with the work of the early physicians of the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District, helped inspire local African Americans to raise funds for their own hospital and, eventually, an integrated facility. In 1943, African Americans in Statesville embarked on a campaign dubbed the “Negro Hospital Fund” to build a hospital that would equitably serve them. The name of the proposed hospital Billingsley Memorial Hospital—echoed the name of the hospital that the Billingsley family helped establish in 1900.³⁵³ The proposed site was on Green Street. A year after the effort began, fundraising chair Travis Van Mangum announced at a gathering at Central Street A.M.E. Zion that $14,000 had been raised from Baptist Churches in western North Carolina, and from local Black and white-owned businesses. The Hospital Fund pulled in $60,000 by 1954 when Iredell Memorial Hospital opened with facilities for African Americans. The proposed Billingsley Memorial Hospital never came to be.³⁵⁴

The community of Garfield and Green Streets Historic District lost a respected citizen when Principal Charles Foushee unexpectedly died at his home (628 South Green Street) in 1935. The crowd at his funeral is said to have “overflowed the spacious auditorium” of the Central Street A.M.E. Zion Church and lined the streets in all directions.”³⁵⁵ His widow Alma taught at Morningside until her retirement in 1946.³⁵⁶ Following the death of Principal Foushee in 1935, Dr. Frank A. Toliver (1907–1983), who had taught at Morningside since the late 1920s, became Principal. Toliver was an alumnus of Atlanta University, the University of Michigan, and Columbia University. Frank married Dr. Anne Peace (1905–1964), and she taught English, Latin, and Drama at Morningside. The Tolivers rented at 211 Garfield Street in the 1920s and 1930s. By 1938, they resided at 626 South Green Street where they remained until they relocated to Asheville in 1941.³⁵⁷

Since its founding as the school for African Americans who lived in Statesville and outlying rural areas, Morningside School gradually outgrew its campus near the southeast corner of Garfield and Green Streets. In 1940 there were 825 students at the small school, described in the newspaper at the time as “a small, poorly equipped building over on South Green Street.”³⁵⁸ To alleviate the congestion and provide up-to-date facilities, the City decided in 1941 to build a high school building for African Americans who lived in Statesville.³⁵⁹ The site (410 Garfield Street) was six acres at the corner of Garfield and Elm Streets. Another Black school—Unity High School—was developed in nearby Belmont to serve rural Iredell students.³⁶⁰

Along with the churches of the Garfield and Green Historic District, Morningside High School was a significant place in the educational and social history of the community. Opened in January 1942, the building was, in the words of the city school superintendent L.S. Weaver, “a great alleviation of what has been the most distressing situation in the colored schools.”³⁶¹ The school physically expanded through the 1940s, 1950s, and 1960s.³⁶²

Alan Douglas Rutherford (1906–1979) succeeded Principal Toliver at Morningside High School in 1941 and remained in the position, which also oversaw the elementary school, until 1968. Born in Oregon, Rutherford was educated at Pacific College in Oregon, the University of California, and Columbia University. He settled in Statesville in 1936 where he taught English and Chorus at Morningside and, in 1943, received a masters in education from Temple University in Philadelphia.³⁶³ Rutherford rented at 303 Garfield Street in the 1930s before settling at 626 Garfield Street in the late 1940s where he remained into the 1960s.³⁶⁴

School athletics at the original Morningside School and the later High School offered African American students a space to demonstrate skills and foster community pride. In the 1930s and early 1940s, Morningside benefitted from the instruction of coach J. Royal Browning. A former Negro League Baseball player known as “Skink,” he coached both football and basketball at Morningside. Browning lived at 626 S. Green Street in the 1930s.³⁶⁵

Neighborhood residents James C. Caldwell and Thomas E. Allison authored a column in the local paper that featured local and national African American news of interest, providing a platform to highlight the issues and achievements of their community.³⁶⁶ Caldwell began the column in 1932, with Allison taking the helm the following year. In his “News of Colored People of Statesville,” Allison, who for many years lived at 536 South Green Street,³⁶⁷ covered sports, school and church events, weddings, births, and deaths. Allison (1897–1966) was a teacher and also a salesman with Winston Mutual Life Insurance Company.³⁶⁸

The Garfield and Green Streets District was subjected to a form of racial discrimination in this period that had a lasting impact: redlining. From 1935 until 1940, the Home Owners’ Loan Corporation (HOLC) created maps as part of its City Survey from 1935 to 1940, aimed at assessing mortgage-lending risks in various neighborhoods across the nation, including Statesville. Established under the New Deal, HOLC’s goal was to aid struggling homeowners while stabilizing the housing market during the Great Depression. However, the survey’s methods institutionalized racial discrimination, as neighborhoods predominantly inhabited by African Americans were marked as “hazardous” for lending. The process involved hiring a predominantly white team of field agents who collected data on local lending practices and real estate conditions, ultimately generating reports that influenced federal policy. For homeowners and prospective homeowners in the district, affordable loans were pushed far out of reach. Most of the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District was included in the HOLC’s map of Statesville from the 1930s. All of the included area was identified as “Poor” or “Blighted.”³⁶⁹

One of the monumental projects of the Works Progress Administration (WPA) was a statewide inventory of both Black and white cemeteries. In 1939, WPA workers inventoried cemeteries in Iredell County, including Green Street Cemetery. Their survey, based only on visible gravestones, identified only 72 burials when, in fact, there were more than 2,000 people buried in the cemetery.³⁷⁰ Some of the more recent burials took place in a section of the cemetery that served as a potter’s field, which opened in the late 1920s. The cemetery was reaching capacity at the time of the survey. In 1943, the City opened a new cemetery for Black people—Belmont Cemetery, on the east side of Statesville.³⁷¹ Green Street Cemetery nevertheless remained hallowed ground, even as physical burial markers faded.

77. Textile and furniture manufacturing were the main industries with grain production a feature of both the city and the county. In the district, a variety of businesses continued to operate and congregations raised new houses of worship.³⁷²

Economic opportunities expanded for African Americans in Statesville in the post-war period, as evidenced by the number of Black-owned businesses operating in the district. Mangum and Peterson and also Rutledge and Bigham continued to provide funeral services. Travis Van Mangum exemplified how Black entrepreneurs could succeed as he also owned a motel outside of town and another funeral home in Salisbury.³⁷³ The commercial building at 609 South Center continued to host a variety of businesses in this period: Mae's Beauty Nook (ca.1950–ca.1960), tailor Howard Houston (ca.1950), dentist Blair Abernathy dentist (ca.1950–ca.1960), physician Alfred L. Coles (ca.1950), and Winston Mutual Life Insurance Company (ca.1960).³⁷⁴ 131 Garfield Street also opened as a barber shop in the 1960s, and it continues to serve this function today as Rankin's Barber Shop.

In 1946, leading African Americans joined together to establish the Iredell Credit Union. Credit unions in North Carolina have a long history in the Black community, particularly as a means to save and borrow money during the Jim Crow era when traditional banking options were often inaccessible to African Americans. By 1940 there were 120 credit unions across North Carolina.³⁷⁵ Among the founders of Iredell Credit Union were George Franklin Dalton, a Morningside schoolteacher, and Travis Van Mangum. Both men continued to serve as officers as the credit union grew. Initially starting with just 18 members, it expanded significantly, reaching 1,000 members by 1958. That year, the credit union opened a new office at 634 South Center Street, signaling its growth and success in serving the broader community.³⁷⁶

For years, the district lacked recreational facilities other than those available at Morningside, but this status changed in the 1950s. The City of Statesville purchased property at the northeast corner of Garfield and South Elm from Virginia L. Glenn of New York in July 1953 for the development of Garfield Street Park, a segregated facility that offered African American youths a swimming pool, recreation center, basketball courts, and softball fields (409 Garfield Street).³⁷⁷ The City simultaneously built a recreation facility for white residents at Grace Park at 510 West Bell Street.³⁷⁸ The ribbon cutting ceremony in June 1954 featured Mayor J. Garner

Bagnal and Morningside High principal Alan B. Rutherford.³⁷⁹ While primarily recreational, Garfield Street Park also hosted political events, such as in October 1954 when Congressman Hugh Alexander spoke in the recreation hall.³⁸⁰ Each year, hundreds of Black children took swimming lessons at Garfield Street Park's swimming pool. Entry was 15 cents for the day.³⁸¹ All but the basketball courts were razed in the 2000s as the park was redeveloped.³⁸²

Religious sites in the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District continued to evolve in this period. Scott's Chapel U.M.C. began raising funds for a new sanctuary in the 1950s with Principal Alan Rutherford of Morningside High School as chair of the fundraising committee. Their efforts led the construction of a new brick building in 1957 (316 Chambers Street) across the street from their early 1900s sanctuary which was demolished to serve as their parking lot. The general contractor for the new sanctuary, which had a kitchen, pastor study, choir room, Sunday School classroom, and an overflow room, was G.L. Wilson Company. After paying off the loan on the project in 1963, the Scott's Chapel congregation held a dedication ceremony.³⁸³

Anchored at the southeast corner of Garfield and Green Streets since the late nineteenth century, the First Baptist Church congregation voted in 1963 to purchase 17 acres for a new church site at Garfield Street and Old Salisbury Road. The church hired local architect Ray Trexel to design the structure. In October 1965, they held a groundbreaking ceremony and, in 1967, Tierney Construction Company completed the work (464 Garfield Street). A notable feature of the church was a day care center that served children throughout Iredell County.³⁸⁴

The Presbyterian Church had a remarkable influence on the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District since the late nineteenth century. In 1968 the congregation of Calvary United Presbyterian Church was formed through the merger of three local churches: Broad Street United Presbyterian, Pleasant Grove United Presbyterian, and Race Street United Presbyterian. By 1969 the newly formed congregation began fundraising efforts for the construction of a new church building. They selected a site at the corner of South Green Street and Newton Avenue, directly north of where Billingsley Memorial Academy, founded in 1905, once stood. Statesville architect Tom H. Hutchins designed the 6,000-square-foot structure, which featured a prominent parabolic-roofed nave rising 56 feet high at the façade. The building, completed in November 1972 at a cost of $136,000, became the new home for the congregation. A dedication ceremony was held on June 24, 1973, and local newspapers provided further details about the design, along with an architect's drawing of the impressive building.³⁸⁵

Morningside School produced notable alumni who went beyond Statesville and some who returned home. Arthur Etheridge Peterson (1922–2010) grew up in Statesville as the son of funeral director Arthur T. Peterson and his wife, Mary Hattie Peterson. After high school graduation he served in the U.S. Army and received degrees from Johnson C. Smith University and New York University.³⁸⁶ Peterson came home to teach at Morningside High School (410 Garfield Street) in 1948.³⁸⁷ When Race Street Elementary School opened in 1956, he went to teach and later became Principal in 1966. Following integration and the conversion of Morningside High School to lower grade levels, he became Principal in 1968.³⁸⁸ In the late 1960s and early 1970s, Peterson, who was involved in coaching athletics as part of his teaching career, was one of two African Americans selected to serve on the 13-member Statesville Recreation Commission.³⁸⁹ He retired from teaching in 1985 when he became the first African American to serve on the Statesville City Council.³⁹⁰

Peterson's wife also was a notable educator. Leola Croom Peterson (1921–2010) was the daughter of Reverend James Croom, former pastor of the First Baptist Church. A graduate of Morningside, Leola received her education from Shaw University and Columbia University. One of her chief accomplishments in four years as an educator was in 1971 when she established the first kindergarten class in Statesville at Avery Sherrill Elementary School.³⁹¹ The Petersons lived at 620 Harrison Street in the late 1950s and early 1960s before moving to 516 South Green Street in 1963.³⁹²

With the high school consolidated, the Statesville City School Board appointed Morningside's Principal Rutherford as Assistant Superintendent of Statesville City Schools.³⁹³ One of Rutherford's legacies as principal was overseeing Morningside's accreditation by the State Department of Public Instruction (1952) and the South Association of Colleges and Schools (1963).³⁹⁴ They honored his years of service in 1970 when they renamed Morningside School in his honor as the Alan D. Rutherford School. At the ceremony, former Principal Frank Toliver remembered Rutherford as a respected school leader who loved children. "From his own pocket, he has purchased shoes, clothes, books and food for those needing them," Toliver recalled, "and these acts have been performed in such a manner to preserve the student's personal pride and ambition."³⁹⁵

Despite these successes, the Black community still endured paternalistic control from local government. Green Street Cemetery, which had closed in the early 1940s, became a concern of the white-governed City Council. In September 1961, City Attorney Jack Harris recommended that the City “take control” of what they considered an “abandoned cemetery.” Harris stated that the trustees who owned the cemetery were deceased and there were no successors. The City Council passed an ordinance in October whereby they took control of the cemetery.³⁹⁶ The local government also sought to revitalize struggling neighborhoods and improve infrastructure in the mid-1960s through the establishment of the Statesville Redevelopment Commission in 1966 which could obtain Federal funds for such projects. As in many other cities, urban renewal often focused on redeveloping poor and blighted communities, often leading to displacement.³⁹⁷ The Redevelopment Commission remained active into the 1980s, with one of its significant projects being the development of the east end cul-de-sac of Broadway Court which entailed the demolition of a number of residences and relocation of residents.³⁹⁸

Recent History of the District, 1975–2025

From 1975 to the present, the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District has seen ongoing efforts to preserve its history and maintain its role in the life of the city, even as Statesville has grown and changed. Some historic sites disappeared, such as the original First Baptist Church (306 Garfield Street, structure non-extant) at the corner of Garfield and Green Streets. In 1980–1981, Center Street AME Zion Church was restored under its pastor, Dr. M.L. Newman, who oversaw repairs to the foundation and basement walls, replacement of old mortar and the roof, and the construction of an addition. The church was listed in the National Register of Historic Places in 1980.³⁹⁹ The District’s churches continued to be centers of community life. Scott’s Chapel United Methodist Church, another long-standing church in the District, marked its 100th anniversary in 1985.⁴⁰⁰ Mayor David L. Pressly officially recognized February as Black History Month in Statesville, following years of local celebration during Negro History Week and the efforts of Black history clubs and the Statesville NAACP.⁴⁰¹ In 1992, community fundraising led to the installation of a brick marker at Green Street Cemetery that honored the historical importance of the site.⁴⁰² More recently, Black residents have taken steps to document and protect the history of the District, contributing to a broader understanding of the area’s past as the city continues to develop.⁴⁰³

The Garfield and Green Streets Historic District is eligible at the local level under Criterion A for Civil Rights. Statesville was a deeply segregated city throughout much of its history. Laws and custom separated white and Black patrons on trains, buses, movie theaters, and the courthouse. Black people could not use the same water fountains, bathrooms, hotels, and swimming pools as whites, and they could not receive medical care in the same facilities. Discrimination in housing and employment were entrenched. Voter rolls included few Black people as poll taxes, reading tests, and other obstacles prevented them from participating in politics. In the area of education, the city's Black public schools received less support when it came to facilities and materials. Residential segregation restricted Black residents to specific neighborhoods.⁴⁰⁴

While the city promoted Statesville as “a wholesome place in which to live” in the mid-twentieth century, the truth was that a battle for equality was underway.⁴⁰⁵ With roots in the 1930s, the local civil rights movement was a visible force of change in Statesville in the 1950s, 1960s, and 1970s. There were people, places, and events in the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District that made significant contributions to the movement as its residents stood up to challenge the status quo. Rev. Jordan Harris of First Baptist Church and other religious leaders and their congregations played important roles. Center Street AME Church, Garfield Park, and Morningside High School were the location of mass rallies that called for voter participation and the end of school segregation. The Mozers, Gibsons, Daltons, Robinsons, and other families whose former homes remain in the District participated in non-violent demonstrators. Teachers, students, and others associated with Morningside High and Morningside Elementary integrated the city's white schools while their neighbors banded together to march the streets of their neighborhood against racial injustice. Even as the District has lost some sites important to civil rights, such as the original First Baptist Church (306 Garfield Street, structure non-extant), the legacy of the movement is evident in a number of other properties.

Early Civil Rights Activism in Statesville, 1934

An important foundation for the modern civil rights movement was laid in Statesville in 1934 when two residents of the District, Travis Van Mangum, a mortician with Peterson & Mangum Funeral Home (662 South Green Street), and Robert W. Dockery, a teacher at Billingsley Academy (contributing site, northeast corner of South Green Street and Dockery Street) and the son of Presbyterian minister Zander Dockery, founded a branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP).⁴⁰⁶ In the years to come, the Statesville NAACP chapter would work to mobilize grassroots activism, address local injustices, and foster community engagement, all of which contributed to the larger struggle for equality.

Voting rights was an immediate area of focus for the NAACP in Statesville. Since 1900, poll taxes, reading tests, and other obstacles blocked African Americans from registering. Dockery and Thomas E. Allison (536 South Green Street), who also taught at Billingsley, stepped forward to attempt to register for the upcoming Democratic primary in May 1934.⁴⁰⁷ Registrar C.R. Sharpe subjected the well-educated men to a literacy test, but failed them upon his dissatisfaction with the results. Dockery and Allison challenged the decision in local court, but the judge deferred the case to the North Carolina Supreme Court. The court ruled against Allison in its 1936 decision in Allison v. Sharpe; however, early voting rights cases like this one bolstered propel forward the fight for voting rights.⁴⁰⁸

School Integration Efforts, 1954–1961

Following World War II, the civil rights movement gained momentum across the nation. School integration became a central area of focus, and shockwaves emanating from this nationwide battle reached Statesville and the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District. Statesville's public schools remained segregated by race. Black elementary school students residing in the District and elsewhere in the city attended Morningside Elementary School (611 South Green Street) while high school students attended the relatively new Morningside High School (410 Garfield Street; opened in 1941). In the monumental Brown v. Board of Education ruling in 1954, the Supreme Court of the United States ruled that racial segregation in public schools, such as those in Statesville, was unconstitutional. The ruling added momentum to the civil rights movement and also stoked white resistance. In North Carolina, state and local governments, which had minimal Black political representation, worked to prevent the integration of schools. The state legislature, backed by a public referendum, established the Pearsall Plan in 1956 which gave local school boards tools to avoid school integration. The Plan effectively stalled school integration in Statesville and in many other places in North Carolina for more than a decade.⁴⁰⁹

As the Brown ruling came down, the Statesville city school board was facing the issue of overcrowding at Morningside Elementary School, a 1920s building (non-extant; 611 South Green Street) where faculty and staff struggled to accommodate the rising number of students.⁴¹⁰ In defiance of Brown, the school board announced in 1955 that it would build a new elementary school for Black students on North Race Street. The school opened in 1956, and while it alleviated the crowded situation at Morningside Elementary for the time being, school segregation remained in place.⁴¹¹ The school again became overcrowded, leading the local board to build an annex behind the main building. Completed in 1961, the annex (611 South Green Street) added six additional classrooms to the school. Although the brand new annex provided a modern facility for the education of Statesville's Black students, it nevertheless was a symbol of the city's ongoing resistance to school integration.⁴¹² Morningside Elementary continued to serve students in the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District through the 1960s as Statesville's population continued to grow.

Desegregating Statesville, 1957–1965

As the battle for school integration continued to evolve, residents of the District became involved in other areas of the expanding civil rights movement. Community interest in civil rights was evident on the evening of Sunday, April 28, 1957 when African American families from many of Statesville's Black churches gathered in the auditorium at Morningside High School where Travis Van Mangum, NAACP President, arranged for New York Representative Adam Clayton Powell to speak. Local pastors canceled services so their congregations could be free to attend. Six hundred people filled the space as Rev. Andrew N. Gibson of Center Street AME (537 South Center Street) introduced Clayton, a key leader in the national fight, who called for the integration of schools and the passage of a civil rights act.⁴¹³

Rev. Gibson (1914–1993) exemplified the growing role of Black church leaders and their congregations in the local civil rights movement. Born in Franklin, he was a graduate of Livingstone College and Seminary in Salisbury who began preaching in North Carolina in the 1930s. He became pastor at Center Street A.M.E. Zion in the early 1950s. An active member of the NAACP, Gibson, in addition to helping coordinate the Powell rally, made headlines in 1958 when he became the first Black person to run for a seat on the Iredell County School Board.⁴¹⁴ At the time, he lived in the District at 115 Wagner Street (his former residence has since been demolished).⁴¹⁵ In May of that year, the First Baptist Church (the original, non-extant location on Green Street) hosted a rally for Gibson that hundreds attended. Though he was not elected, Gibson's campaign set a precedent for later Black figures to run and hold political office in Statesville and Iredell County.⁴¹⁶ Myrtle Horrington (1892–1968), a retired teacher and President of the Negro Women's Association who lived on West Sharpe Street, became the first Black person to run for city council in 1959.⁴¹⁷ Funeral home director Travis Van Mangum (206

Garfield Street) would later challenge the status quo when he ran for a city council seat in 1963, stating in a letter to the local newspaper that he was running because he believed he could strengthen “the bond of friendship” between the Black and white communities in Statesville.⁴¹⁸ In 1966, he ran for a county commission seat while Rev. Jordan C. Harris of First Baptist Church unsuccessfully ran for school board.⁴¹⁹

Rev. Jordan Clifton Harris (1923–2013) was another Black pastor who prominently featured in the local civil rights movement. His efforts began as soon as he started as the pastor of the First Baptist Church in 1962. Through the 1960s, he led local sit-ins, lobbied the city government to integrate public facilities, and served as President of the NAACP, among other efforts that made him perhaps the most well-known figure in the local movement. As a young man, Harris, who grew up picking cotton in his native Franklin County, demonstrated an aptitude for preaching. He graduated from Shaw Divinity and began preaching at Wadesboro before settling in Statesville to serve as pastor at First Baptist. He continued this role until his death in 2011.⁴²⁰

Young people swelled the ranks of the civil rights movement in the 1960s, joining groups such as the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) and the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC). They adopted the techniques of non-violent resistance to combat segregation and discrimination. The Greensboro Woolworth’s lunch counter sit-ins of February 1960 inspired similar efforts in Statesville and around the South. The Statesville Woolworth’s became the focal point of four sit-ins beginning on March 15. Nannie Ray Houston, Charles Napoleon Hart, Margaret Glenn, Shirley Ruth Moten, all Black college students who were completing teacher training at Unity High School in Belmont (two miles east of Statesville), participated in the first sit-in which resulted in the police escorting them out of the building. Unity later fired the teachers. The following evening, unidentified rock-and-brick throwers attacked the homes of local civil rights leaders, including the home of Myrtle Horrington (1892–1968) on West Sharpe Street.⁴²¹

Local youths continued to put pressure on Statesville’s Woolworth’s lunch counter in the weeks to come. On March 21, several unidentified high school students sat down at the Woolworths lunch counter. Rather than serve them, the manager closed the lunch counter, and the students left.⁴²² Eight days later, a larger group of students—all from Unity School—returned. Eight sat at the counter and, again, the manager temporarily closed the lunch counter and the demonstrators left. Woolworth’s then reopened the counter, but the students returned with a ninth demonstrator. Local law enforcement made them leave and arrested some of the students. Seventeen-year-old

Joyce Ann Reed was said to be the “ringleader” of this sit-in. Along with James Riley Hammons and Stafford Ricks Turner, she would spend time in jail for her participation in the event.⁴²³ Even though they could be fined, arrested, jailed, or attacked, African Americans in Statesville of all ages continued to employ nonviolent tactics to desegregate their city. On August 18, 1962, two unidentified Black girls tried to gain access to the pool at Grace Park, the city’s white counterpart to Garfield Park. They were barred entry and the city temporarily closed the pool.⁴²⁴ A day later, civil rights organizations launched a statewide effort to integrate Howard Johnson restaurants. Aided by out-of-town comrades, Statesville demonstrators descended upon their local Howard Johnson eatery in northern Statesville.⁴²⁵ The people of the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District were notably among the demonstrators. Rev. Jordan Clifton Harris of the First Baptist Church (at the time, still at the corner of Garfield and Green Streets), Rev. Wilson W. Lee of St. John Baptist Church (in the Poplar Grove neighborhood), and NAACP President Travis Van Mangum (206 Garfield Street) organized and participated in the event. In addition to Mangum, other participants who lived in the District at this time were Morningside High graduates Peggy Ruth Mozer (314 Dockery Street) and Lillian Gibson (620 South Elm Street); Morningside teacher, George Franklin Dalton (625 South Elm; non-extant); and laundromat employee, Florene Robinson (678 South Elm).⁴²⁶ The group of more than two dozen demonstrators sat for service in the restaurant and congregated outside, singing hymns. In response, local law enforcement arrested 21 demonstrators for trespassing.⁴²⁷

The arrests of peaceful protesters elicited a strong response from both allies and opponents of the civil rights movement. James Farmer, national director of CORE, sent a telegram to Mayor J. Garner Bagnal of Statesville, as well as North Carolina governor Terry Sanford and Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy, threatening “to turn Statesville into another Albany, Georgia, or Jackson, Mississippi” if such injustice continued.⁴²⁸ Farmer referred to cities where hundreds had participated in mass demonstrations. To underscore his point, Farmer traveled to Statesville to demand the release of those jailed.⁴²⁹

Meanwhile, a group of local Black leaders went to the city council to call for an end to segregation and to lobby for the release of the demonstrators who were in jail under exorbitantly high bonds. Among the leaders was Martha Dalton whose husband, George, had been released on bond.⁴³⁰ Martha pleaded that the bonds for the remaining inmates be lowered. “Try to understand a little bit better those of us who live across the tracks, those of us who have black faces,” she said to Mayor Bagnal. “To you $500 doesn’t seem like that much, I’m sure.”⁴³¹ Bagnal stated he had no say in the amount of the bonds. Following the city council meeting, residents of the District and other Black neighborhoods flooded the First Baptist Church on Green Street. The newspaper reported that this rally of support drew in 500 Black citizens who demanded the release of the inmates. As Martha arrived, they welcomed her with heavy applause.⁴³² They then marched down the streets of the District to the city jail where they sang hymns.⁴³³ As they peacefully protested, a Jeep zoomed by them and sprayed them with an unidentified liquid. The city later investigated the incident and determined that the substance was insecticide. Mayor Bagnal defended the perpetrator, describing the incident as an accident.⁴³⁴ The details surrounding the ultimate release of the inmates are not known, but it is clear that this event served to galvanize the local movement.

The civil rights events in Statesville of 1962 had a noticeable impact on the city. Afterwards, voters elected new city council members who promised to calmly resolve the segregation crisis, the local police chief in charge of the arrests resigned, and many businesses in town began to let down their racial barriers.⁴³⁵ Still, civil rights leaders maintained pressure on the city. In a letter to Mayor Bagnal in June 1963, Black leaders in Statesville called for the desegregation of all recreational facilities in the city. The leaders who authored the demand were familiar faces in the local struggle: Rev. R.R. Woods (Tradd Street Presbyterian Church, at the time located in the District),⁴³⁶ Rev. Jordan C. Harris (First Baptist Church, in the District at its original Green Street location), Rev. Wilson W. Lee (St. John Baptist Church in Poplar Grove), Myrtle Horrington, and funeral director and NAACP leader Travis Van Mangum (206 Garfield Street). The group also sent a letter to the Iredell County Board of Commissioners calling for the desegregation of Iredell Memorial Hospital.⁴³⁷

The people and places of the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District continued to play a role in the local civil rights movement through the 1960s. Rev. Harris and other Black leaders pushed to dismantle the obstacles of employment discrimination. They worked with the Statesville Merchants Association in 1963 and 1964 to encourage business owners to give full consideration to Black applicants. The next year, Harris made a proposal to the Association to establish a retail training program for Black job seekers. The business community, once opposed to desegregation efforts, began to change their minds as a result of these efforts.⁴³⁸

Statesville's recreation facilities remained a target of desegregation efforts. In August 1963, after Black activists persistently attempted to integrate these places, the city council worked with Black leaders to issue a resolution authorizing the recreation department to desegregate the city's facilities. The announcement sent a shockwave through the community, compelling both white and Black residents into action. More than 800 citizens who were opposed to the resolution signed a petition calling for an election to recall the council members.⁴³⁹ Days prior to the September 19 election, Black citizens who hoped to retain the city council held a mass rally at Center Street AME Zion (537 South Center Street) in an attempt to boost voter registration. The rally, emceed by Rev. Jordan C. Harris and attended by 300 people, was a show of community strength. Attendees took a collection of gas money to ensure unregistered voters could have transportation to register. Children came forward, promising to knock on doors to remind people to register. Rev. Edgar French of Livingstone College, who was a close associate of Martin Luther King, Jr., addressed the audience, imploring unregistered voters to skip work in order to register while Harris renewed the call for desegregation in Statesville, regardless of who may hold council seats. Travis Van Mangum, president of the NAACP, also addressed the audience, expressing his dismay that the peaceful process of desegregation had been derailed. He asked the crowd "Are you going to stand for it?" to which he received as resounding "No!" He then asked "Are you going to register and vote?" to which they replied "Yes!"⁴⁴⁰ The election broke city records for voter turnout, but unfortunately for the local civil rights movement, the existing city council members who were willing to work with the Black community on desegregation were replaced.⁴⁴¹ Consistent pressure, nevertheless, would integrate city pools in the late 1960s.⁴⁴²

The efforts of local people, including those of the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District, helped win the passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 that further delegitimized segregation and the Voting Rights Act of 1965 that ended voter discrimination across the nation. However, the struggle for the integration of schools, equal housing, and political office remained goals of African Americans in Statesville and other Southern cities.

The Final Push for School Integration, 1961–1970

School integration was one of the longest-fought battles of the civil rights movement in Statesville. The two Black schools of the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District—Morningside High School and Morningside Elementary—were places of contention in the struggle. Their students, faculty, and staff, including many from the District, would ultimately integrate Statesville's school system, and only the High School site would remain open as a result of integration.

Morningside Elementary (611 South Green Street), whose annex had opened to relieve the pressure of overcrowding at the campus in 1961, remained the most heavily-attended Black elementary school in the city in 1960s. About 620 students enrolled for the 1962–1963 school year while the other Black elementary school, North Race Street, had about 170 students. Morningside High had about 200 students.⁴⁴³ An early crack in school segregation came in September 1963 as a result of recent court decisions which influenced the city school board to permit sixteen Black students to attend white schools.⁴⁴⁴

The city school board, emboldened by the Pearsall Plan (1956) and local white resistance to integration, had largely prevented the mixing of races in its schools until the mid-1960s when court challenges began to break down the walls of segregation. In the spring of 1964, several Black families from the Poplar Grove and Rankintown communities, represented by Julius Chambers and other NAACP attorneys, brought a suit (Nesbitt v. Statesville Board of Education) against the school board in which they claimed that ongoing school segregation violated their civil rights. The case reached the US District Court which ruled in August that the school board had three years to integrate.⁴⁴⁵

The school board's reluctance to comply with full integration lingered into the late 1960s, but local Black activists refused to give up. Statesville's struggle for civil rights continued to bring significant leaders in the movement to the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District. On April 30, 1965, the local NAACP chapter, now led by Rev. Harris, hosted its annual Freedom Fund Banquet at Garfield Recreation Center (known today as Garfield Park, 409 Garfield Street). The key speaker was Julius Chambers of Charlotte, a leading attorney in the fight for school desegregation who had helped win the Nesbitt v. Stateville case. In the coming years, he would argue eight cases in the Supreme Court and win all of them.⁴⁴⁶ At the banquet, Chambers explained that the token integration occurring in Statesville did not follow recent court rulings and he encouraged all Black parents in Statesville to demand their children attend white schools. Rev. Harris, Travis Van Mangum, Rev. Wood of Tradd Street Presbyterian Church, and Myrtle Horrington also spoke at the event.⁴⁴⁷ In the month afterwards, Harris sustained pressure. He sent letters to the local newspaper demanding immediate integration, and after the Ku Klux Klan marched down Center Street, he wrote a letter stating the movement's refusal to be intimidated.⁴⁴⁸

Pressure from rulings in civil rights cases resulted in the integration of Statesville's schools. Beginning in the fall semester of 1968, Morningside High School students enrolled in the previously all-white Statesville High School.⁴⁴⁹ Race Street Elementary School students enrolled across the city's white elementary schools. However, Morningside Elementary, where most of the city's elementary-level Black students (766 students) received their education, remained entirely Black.⁴⁵⁰ The impetus to finally integrate Morningside Elementary School followed federal court cases that declared the Pearsall Plan unconstitutional (1969) and mandated busing to achieve integration (1970). Morningside Elementary students transferred into Statesville's white elementary schools in the spring semester of 1970. The school board then closed their school on Green Street.⁴⁵¹

Undoing Discrimination in Housing, 1967–1975

The new First Baptist Church (464 Garfield Street, completed in 1967) represented the enduring significance of this congregation and the leadership of its pastor, Rev. Harris, in the ongoing struggle for African American equality. Notably involved in desegregating the city, Harris turned to ending discrimination in housing. In November 7, 1967, he brought forward a complaint about the substandard housing and neighborhood conditions for African Americans in Statesville to the city council, imploring members and the mayor to do something. He urged the city to establish an integrated housing authority that would support middle- and low-income families. He asked the council to compel landlords in predominantly white neighborhoods to rent to Black tenants. Additionally, Harris requested improved street lighting in Black neighborhoods and better enforcement of housing codes. He warned the council that if these issues were not addressed, Statesville could experience the same type of violence occurring in other cities. Mayor Bagnal responded that the city was studying the issue of housing and considering an authority.⁴⁵² When Harris returned three weeks later to follow up on his concerns, the mayor announced that that the city would establish a housing authority.⁴⁵³ The initial members of the Housing Authority, which began operating in 1968, included two African Americans, Travis Van Mangum and Richard J. Harris.⁴⁵⁴ Lonnie P. Davis, a local teacher and the secretary of Peterson-Mangum Funeral Home (611 South Green Street), succeeded Mangum in 1970.⁴⁵⁵ Statesville's first public housing units, open to Black and white applicants, were occupied in 1970 and the Authority also offered housing assistance to all of its inhabitants.⁴⁵⁶

Even though equality in all aspects of life remained elusive for Statesville's Black residents, the local civil rights movement in Statesville in 1975 could look back at a long struggle with notable achievements. Public spaces such as schools, parks, and restaurants had desegregated. Black residents had filled voter registration rolls and they actively sought positions in local government. Black institutions, from churches to the NAACP, propelled the movement to important victories. The historical people, places, and events of the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District were significant in these monumental changes.

Comparative Analysis: The Historic African American Neighborhoods of Statesville, ca.1890–ca.1975

Along with the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District, there were nine other African American residential neighborhoods in Statesville's history: Depot Hill, Wallacetown, Rabbittown, Sunnyside, Rankintown, Newtonville, Poplar Branch, Belmont, and Old Field. These neighborhoods, whose history is summarized below, were located two miles or less from the downtown center of the city.

Depot Hill

As Statesville arose from the ashes of the Civil War, African Americans settled in Depot Hill. The neighborhood was generally located along either side of South Center Street between Bell Street and the Southern Railway. Depot Hill included homes and businesses along Wagner Street, McElwee Street, Chambers Street, the western end of Garfield Street, and the southern end of South Meeting Street. Transportation facilities and white-owned factories were the largest buildings in the area. There were perhaps a dozen white- and black-owned businesses in the two decades following the war. In 1868, freedmen Sidney Murdock and Alfred Bailey established a Methodist Episcopal church that later became known as Center Street A.M.E. Zion Church (537 South Center Street).⁴⁵⁷ African Americans continued to settle in Depot Hill and they continued to open businesses as the nineteenth century closed, including Jerry Earnhardt who opened a hotel in 1884.⁴⁵⁸ In 1889, there were at least a half dozen Black property owners in Depot Hill, and numerous Black residents appear in city directories into the early twentieth century.⁴⁵⁹

Depot Hill was characterized by a mix of property usages—religious, commercial, transportation, and residential—until about the time of a destructive fire in 1923. Among the losses was the Foushee Building, owned by Charles W. Foushee who served as principal of Morningside School in the District, and the barber shop of Angus Littlejohn.⁴⁶⁰ Residential usage along South Center Street faded over the years, leaving an area of primarily transportation, commercial, and industrial uses. The remaining businesses and the Center Street AME Zion Church (537 South Center), linkages to the African American roots of Depot Hill, integrated into the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District whose western edge includes these sites and several others along South Center Street.

Wallacetown

Wallacetown existed by 1895, but only its streetscape is identifiable in the present.⁴⁶¹ Located along Jefferson Street, Washington Avenue, Monroe Street, and Rickert Street (as it runs north of Monroe), Wallacetown may have been an outgrowth of African American settlement from Depot Hill, lying to the northwest, and the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District to the north. However, Wallacetown was separated from these neighboring areas by the Southern Railway tracks. A footpath, later replaced by the Elm Street Bridge in the mid-twentieth century, historically connected Wallacetown to the Garfield and Green Streets area to the north.

Wallacetown and nearby Rabbittown were home to 65 families in 1895.⁴⁶² City directories indicate residents primarily were working class people who were employed with the railroad or in nearby factories. Wallacetown had Episcopal and Methodist churches, as well as a grocer.⁴⁶³ By the mid-1930s when the community was dominated by the Statesville Plywood and Veneer plant, about 225 people lived in Wallacetown.⁴⁶⁴ There were about two dozen houses in Wallacetown by the World War II period.⁴⁶⁵ Statesville's urban renewal program of the 1970s led to the destruction of nearly every residence in Wallacetown.⁴⁶⁶

Rabbittown

Southeast of Wallacetown across Monroe Road, Rabbittown was a larger African American neighborhood that was roughly bounded on the west by Rickert Street, on the south by Dobson Avenue, and on the east by Lerain Court.⁴⁶⁷ One of the first settlers in this section was James W. Rickert (1849–1931) who was known in Statesville for his many years as a drayman. The date he settled Rabbittown, which he referred to as Rickertville, is not known, although he was a resident of Statesville by 1880.⁴⁶⁸ The city newspaper described Rabbittown in the 1890s as a “notable” African American suburb.⁴⁶⁹ Along with nearby Wallacetown, Rabbittown in 1895 was home to 65 families who worked with the railroad, in local factories, and in other blue-collar jobs.⁴⁷⁰ Unlike Wallacetown, Rabbittown, was mostly residential. There was one grocery store in the neighborhood by 1910. The community grew to include an amusement hall, additional grocery stores, and a church.⁴⁷¹ There were 550 residents in Rabbittown by 1940.⁴⁷² In the 1970s, the neighborhood became a focus of urban renewal. Statesville’s redevelopment commission rerouted and renamed streets and replaced older housing with new public housing. Industrial Boulevard, later renamed Garner Bagnal Boulevard, split the northern reaches of the community in half.⁴⁷³

Sunnyside

The African American neighborhood of Sunnyside also suffered losses due to urban renewal. C.A. “Jack” Stearns, a local white developer and businessman, platted Sunnyside in 1924. The location was directly west of Rabbittown across a creek that was oriented north-south.⁴⁷⁴ The community may have been named after Sunnyside school that existed several years before in the vicinity.⁴⁷⁵ The 1925 Sanborn map illustrated three dozen houses in Sunnyside.⁴⁷⁶ There were about 190 residents by the mid-1930s when the community had a grocery store and a Methodist Church.⁴⁷⁷ Sunnyside was completely demolished and redeveloped during Statesville's urban renewal period of the late 1970s. Today, nearly all of the buildings in former Sunnyside have build dates after 1975.⁴⁷⁸ McCollough Street is the primary street of this area in the present.

Rankintown

About a mile north of the city center and across Kelly Creek, Rankintown (sometimes known as Rankinsville) is located along the east side of North Center Street, spreading across Brevard, Sylvia, Poplar, Hackett and Bingham streets.⁴⁷⁹ The neighborhood existed by the start of the twentieth century when newspapers begin to mention it as "a colored settlement on the northern suburbs of Statesville."⁴⁸⁰ Rankinsville Congregationalist Church, founded in 1907 and later known as Bethel Congregational (327 East Turner Street).⁴⁸¹ Another historical church was Gold Hill Baptist Church.⁴⁸² The population of the neighborhood in the 1930s and 1940s was about 180 people.⁴⁸³ The city removed or demolished about a dozen homes in the 1940s to accommodate the construction of the all-white Statesville High School (474 North Center Street).⁴⁸⁴ Today, there are about two dozen properties in Rankintown that were built prior to 1975.

Newtonville

To the west of Rankintown and a couple blocks from North Center Street was Newtonville. The neighborhood included West Bingham Street, North Mulberry Street, and a section of North Race Street, as well as several short streets. The neighborhood formed by 1897, and city directories through the 1930s refer to it as an African American settlement. There were about 130 people in Newtonville in the 1940s.⁴⁸⁵ Statesville's school board, seeking to avoid integration, completed a new elementary school for Statesville's African Americans—Race Street Elementary (549 North Race Street)—in 1956.⁴⁸⁶ By the mid-1970s, the city's urban renewal program considered Newtonville to be blighted and planned for its redevelopment. neighborhood had about 110 structures and 99 families, including 24 white families who were displaced when their homes were razed in the mid-to-late 1970s.⁴⁸⁷

Poplar Branch

Settled by 1900, Poplar Branch is located about a mile-and-a-half west of downtown Statesville.⁴⁸⁸ The neighborhood spans Woodruff, Secor, Miller, Church, and School Streets, an area south of two historic mills (both non-extant), Bloomfield Cotton Mill and Paola Cotton Mill. St. John Baptist (1438 Church Street) has been an anchor of the community since the early twentieth century. Poplar Branch had a graded school into the World War II years when the population was about 200 people.⁴⁸⁹ The city paved the streets in the 1950s.⁴⁹⁰ Poplar Branch remains a small neighborhood with about two dozen properties built prior to 1975.

Belmont

About two miles east of downtown Statesville is the historically Black community of Belmont which came into existence along the Southern Railway corridor by the 1880s.⁴⁹¹ Love Methodist Episcopal Church was an early landmark in the community that later relocated to the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District to become Scott's Chapel UMC (316 Chambers Street). By the 1910s, Belmont had a small school and, by the 1930s, a couple grocery stores and a baseball park.⁴⁹² The population in 1940 was 260 people. A year later, Unity High School opened in the community to alleviate crowding at Morningside High in the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District. Unity served Black students in Belmont and the surrounding rural area.⁴⁹³ Unity High closed with integration in 1969. Another important site in Belmont—Belmont Cemetery (2000 East Greenbriar Road)—opened after the Green Street Cemetery reached capacity in 1943.⁴⁹⁴ Belmont is northeast of the intersection of Salisbury Road and Interstate 77, and today they area about 65 structures built prior to 1975.

Old Field

About a mile-and-a-half south of the center of downtown Statesville at the end of 7th Street is another historical African American neighborhood known as Old Field. The neighborhood, lying outside of the Statesville city limits up to the present, began to appear in city directories in the early 1930s. There were about 100 people living in the community by 1940. There was an all-Black graded school known as Rocky Knoll (162 Wallace Springs Road) until 1951. The school

In Comparison: Garfield and Green Streets Historic District

Statesville's Black neighborhoods have several historical similarities. All appeared in the decades following the Civil War, when African Americans settled in Statesville as it evolved into a transportation and manufacturing center. Along with residences, these neighborhoods typically included a church or two, a few businesses, and, in some instances, a small school for neighborhood children. All developed in the context of segregation which limited where African Americans could settle.

The Garfield and Green Streets Historic District, however, differed from its historical counterparts in notable ways. In terms of size, the District was the largest of all the neighborhoods. Although specific population figures for the neighborhood are not available, historic maps and aerial photography demonstrate that the District had more density and larger streetscapes. The District today includes a greater number of historic properties than its counterparts due to size and also the fact that the District did not suffer extensive losses due to urban renewal. The District contains the most important sites in Statesville's Black history, places which hold prominence to Black people in Statesville and outlying areas. The Green Street Cemetery held importance to Black people beyond the District because it was the only place in Statesville where Black people, including those from Rabbittown, Newtonville, Poplar Branch, and elsewhere, could be buried until the 1940s when it reached capacity. Public educational institutions—the original Colored Grade School (later called Morningside School and Morningside Elementary) and Morningside High School (later known as Alan D. Rutherford High School)—served Black students from the late nineteenth century into the early 1970s. Moreover, the privately-funded Billingsley Academy educated students from 1906 through the 1930s. Similar to schools, several of the District's Black churches were large and influential, drawing congregants from across the city. They include First Baptist Church (464 Garfield Street), Center Street AME Zion (537 South Center Street), and Calvary Presbyterian Church (500 South Green Street), drew congregants from across Statesville. The District was home to working class people like other Black neighborhoods, but middle- and upper-class Black people—including teachers, principals, physicians, businesspeople, and religious leaders—were especially prominent in Garfield and Green Streets. Along with their families, they left a discernible legacy on the city's history.

The National Register boundary is shown by a black line on the accompanying map, drawn at a 1"=200' scale. The boundary follows tax parcel lines except at its south to encompass the S. Elm Street Bridge. The district is roughly bounded at the north by a tributary of Fourth Creek, at the west by South Center Street, at the south by the Norfolk Southern railroad tracks, and at the east by Old Salisbury Road. Beginning at point B1 on the map, the boundary follows the rear of parcels along Newton Avenue to South Green Street. It then moves north to follow the north and west parcel lines of 516 S. Green Street before continuing along the rear parcel lines of the parcels south of the creek tributary. At the northwest corner of the parcel of 111 Lincoln Street, it moves south to the northeast corner of the Mt. Pleasant AME Zion Church parcel at 537 S. Center Street. The boundary follows the western right-of-way of S. Center Street across the right-of-way of Shelton Avenue to the rear parcel lines of parcels in the even 600-block of S.

Center Street. The boundary turns east to the parcel line of the Statesville Flour Mill at 701 S. Center Street to encompass parcels south of Garfield Street and west of Harrison Street. It intersects the western right-of-way of Harrison Street and southern right-of-way of Chambers Street, which intersect in a curve in the southwestern portion of the district. The boundary follows the western parcel line for 206-220 Chambers Street and then east with the southern boundary of properties south of Chambers Street and the Norfolk Southern Railroad right-of-way. At the western right-of-way with S. Elm Street, the boundary jogs southwest approximately 50 feet, south approximately 120 feet along a parcel line, east approximately 87 feet, north approximately 60 feet along a parcel line, and northwest approximately 163 feet to the southwest corner of the parcel for 695 S. Elm Street to encompass the S. Elm Street Bridge, then continues east along the parcel lines of properties south of Chambers Street and along the Norfolk Southern Railroad right-of-way. The boundary then follows the parcel line of First Baptist Church at 464 Garfield Street to the eastern right-of-way of Old Salisbury Road. It then continues north to the starting point at the northeast corner of the parcels north of Newton Avenue.

Boundary Justification

The boundaries of the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District were determined according to the density of developed of the area north of the Norfolk Southern Railroad tracks and around the historic core of the district at the intersection of Garfield Street and S. Green Street.

Preceding the period of historic significance, most of the property comprising the Garfield and Green Streets Historic District was owned by a small number of White persons. Into the early twentieth century, these large parcels were platted and sold to a mix of Black and White buyers. The southern portion of the district is comprised of land sold by Mary C. Bell as early as the 1870s. Her property lay north of railroad tracks and south of Garfield Street, which included the tract which became the Green Street Cemetery and the parcels along Chambers Street on which are the oldest extant buildings. Vacant parcels along the north side of the railroad tracks along what was a dirt path known as Railroad Avenue are today inaccessible; however, they are included as historically part of the district within the physical boundary formed by the railroad tracks.

The property of Mrs. M. A. Tomlin forms the northeastern portion of the district. In 1917 she subdivided land north of Garfield Street surrounding Billingsley Memorial Academy, which she had sold to its trustees in 1901. Eighty-four parcels of approximately 0.2 acres were purchased by many Black residents. Parcels north of Newton Avenue and at the northern end of Old Salisbury Road are vacant today, but they are included within the district boundaries as they are part of the Tomlin plat and are historically known as part of the district.

The section of the district north of Garfield Street and east of S. Green Street organically developed within the boundary largely due to its location south of a tributary of Fourth Creek. At the turn of the twentieth century, this creek was highly polluted due to runoff from a tannery at the southwest corner of S. Center Street and W. Bell Street outside the boundaries.

The western boundary was formed around the commercial section at the intersection of Garfield Street and S. Center Street. The determination of parcels to be included in the boundary was made based on the historic presence of Black businesses and the integrity of buildings. Mt. Pleasant AME Zion Church at the northeast corner of Garfield Street and S. Center Street, is the oldest extant religious building in the district, and many residents were members. Immediately across Garfield Street is Rutledge and Bigham Mortuary Service, the oldest operating Black business in the district. This area along S. Center Street was historically known as Depot Hill, as the railroad depot was originally located at the southern terminus of S. Center Street. Extant properties closest to the railroad, such as the Antebellum Hotel, were excluded as they were white-owned and -operated and had a minimal relationship with the district. The Statesville Flour Mill was also excluded. Although its physical presence is felt throughout the district, as it visibly looms over Garfield Street, Harrison Street, and Chambers Street, and many residents were found to have historically worked at the mill, a large industrial property does not contribute to the residential and small-scale commercial character of the district. The five parcels of the 600-block of S. Center Street were included in the district boundaries as they were the location of businesses which served the Black community.

The southeastern boundary of the district is largely formed by the 15-acre parcel which includes First Baptist Church. Historically, this area was undeveloped with Garfield Street terminating at S. Elm Street until the opening of Morningside High School in 1942. When the church relocated from the core of the neighborhood at Garfield Street and S. Green Street in 1967, the previously undeveloped section along Garfield Street was integrated into the district.

A large area south of the railroad tracks and Salisbury Road, north of Garner Bagnal Boulevard/US-70, east of Shelton Avenue, and west of Wall Street were also surveyed. This large area of approximately 170 acres was excluded as it was found to have little to no historical significance with the district. A majority of this section is industrial, and most residential buildings were found to have been occupied by white residents during the period of significance. Two portions were more closely scrutinized, residential clusters north of the railroad tracks along Hunt Street and immediately south of the railroad tracks along Jefferson Street and Washington Avenue. Historic imagery showed that the Hunt Street section was largely connected to areas east of Salisbury Road, and the extant dwellings were developed late in the period of significance. However, an argument for the section along Jefferson Street and Washington Avenue to be included in the district was considered plausible as the area included Black-owned and -occupied residences, some businesses, and an Episcopal mission. The footpath which connected southern Black communities with the institutions located in the district was also located in this section, with its southern terminus at the intersection curve of Jefferson Street and Jackson Street; but it is no longer extant as the construction of the S. Elm Street Bridge negated its use. However, there are few extant resources remaining, and the area was excluded from the district due to lack of integrity.
